U.S. Says:

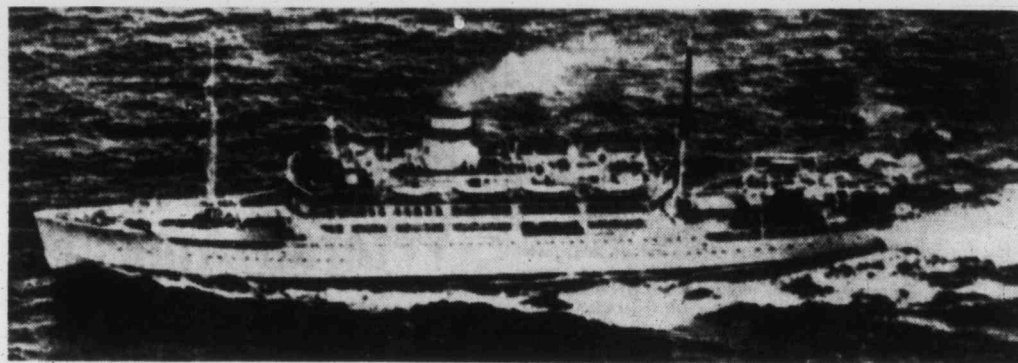

Won't Let Russia Flout UN

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — The U.S. said Saturday night it would not stand idly by and see the Soviet Union flout the United Nations' will in the Congo. (See also Page 3.)

U.S. delegate James J. Wadsworth was commenting on Soviet opposition to Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjöld's latest Congo proposals — which include temporary disarming of some Congolese military units.

There was no clear indication of what the U.S. action might be and nothing is expected before the council meets again Monday.

"We cannot agree with disarmament of troops, on his (Hammarskjöld's) own initiative, which are not named," said a Soviet spokesman.

Communist "Summit" Liner Heads Towards New York

Red 'Summit' Heads to U.S.

MOSCOW (UPI) — Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev's floating "Communist Summit"—the Russian liner Baltika—sailed past Sweden and Denmark last night on its way to the United Nations general assembly meeting in New York City.

There was no word from aboard the ship, which also is carrying the Communist party leaders of Hungary, Romania and Bulgaria, about the United States' announcement that Khrushchev would be restricted to Manhattan during his visit to the UN.

WHO'S WHO

Apart from the Russian leader a veritable who's who of world leaders is also converging on New York for what observers believe will be a sensational meeting.

Yugoslavia's Marshal Tito announced yesterday he would attend, and within hours word was received from Egypt that controversial Gamal Nasser would also attend in person.

Other "crisis" names who will join the melee are President Sukarno of Indonesia (personally invited by Khrushchev), Premier Sekou Toure of Guinea (now visiting Red China) and President Nkrumah of Ghana.

East Germany's arch-Communist Walter Ulbricht has asked for—and will probably be granted—permission to attend the UN meeting as an observer. East Germany is not a UN member.

Also CONFIDENT Informers sources here are also confident that two other highly controversial world leaders will also be present. They are Premier Fidel Castro of Cuba and Premier Ben-Gurion of Israel, arch-enemy of Nasser.

Notably absent from the proceedings will be the major Western leaders—President Eisenhower, Prime Minister Macmillan, President de Gaulle and India's Premier Nehru.

Also conspicuous by his absence will be Red China's Chou En-lai.

ONLY WORD The only official word from the Khrushchev ship came from the official Soviet news agency Tass.

It said that Khrushchev, Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko and other officials were "busy with current affairs."

Tass said that Khrushchev cabled greetings to the Swedish, Danish and Norwegian governments when the Baltika passed within sight of Denmark and Sweden.

Casino Bandits Vanish With $500,000 Haul

CAMPIONE, Italy (UPI) — Three dapper bandits robbed a gambling casino here early today and escaped with nearly $500,000.

The robbers, described later as "well-dressed gentlemen," left a casino teller bound and gagged in his office, then vanished without a trace.

$2,000,000,000 Hurricane Loss

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Hurricane Donna swirled inland through the heart of the Florida citrus belt Saturday night, dealing untold damage to the almost ripe, multi-million-dollar crop of oranges and grapefruit.

Tampa weather bureau estimated total damage in the state to be $2,000,000,000.

Warnings were ordered up along the Atlantic coast as far north as Savannah, Ga.

One hundred-mile-an-hour winds rocked Lakeland. Just before midnight the eye of the vicious storm was moving steadily north through central Florida.

Behind it, the killer hurricane left much of the lower Florida Gulf coast isolated. Four deaths had been reported. Fragmentary reports told of 13 injured in Fort Myers.

From Fort Myers, George Hunter of the Lee County disaster committee said roofs were blown from homes and stores.

"Some of the houses were blown clear over," he said during a brief telephone call.

DRIVER DROWNS One of the dead, truck driver Dwight Barnes of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., was drowned when his semi-trailer jackknifed and plunged him into a river.

A youth was electrocuted at Winter Haven while trying to remove a television antenna; a Miami man died in a car accident on a rain-slicked highway, and a man's body was washed ashore at Tavernier in the Keys.

DEFENCE MINISTER PEARKE

GOWAN GUEST
... bright young man

Families Flee Wild Fires

NORTHERN BAY, Nfld. (CP) — Fire was raging uncontrolled Saturday night at the edge of this sparsely settled fishing community on Newfoundland's Avalon Peninsula, 100 miles north of St. John's.

Women and children were reported fleeing their homes as fishermen made a desperate attempt to halt the flames, driven by winds up to 35 miles an hour.

By TERRY HAMMOND

Defence Minister George Pearkes last night expressed shocked surprise that a former Diefenbaker aide has made a bid to win the Conservative nomination in his home riding of Esquimalt-Saanich.

In a long-distance phone talk with the Colonist from Ottawa he immediately dispelled any possibility that he was backing the prime minister's former executive assistant, Vancouver lawyer Gowan Guest, for his seat in parliament.

"I have not resigned," thundered the veteran Conservative and long-suffering defence minister, "I would say this is a little premature."

EXCLUSIVE STORY He was commenting on an exclusive Colonist news story which bared the text of a letter written by Mr. Guest to key Conservatives in Mr. Pearkes' riding.

"I expect to finish out my term," he said in reference to reports that he would soon quit his cabinet post to become B.C.'s lieutenant-governor.

KEPT SECRET

His request in the letter that its contents be kept secret drew a chortle from the defence minister and the dry observation "he doesn't seem to have been very successful in keeping the matter confidential."

He said that if he did resign his seat he would not "interfere in any way" with the normal constituency process of finding a successor.

But he termed resignation unlikely and said that although he had made it plain he would probably not seek another term in parliament "I am not closing the door."

CABINET SHUFFLE

Asked to comment on a report in a Vancouver newspaper that his appointment as lieutenant-governor of B.C. was to be announced next week simultaneously with a cabinet shuffle at Ottawa he replied hotly, "I don't think it would be possible to announce it without having first secured my consent."

He said he had not been asked for his consent and that he had no information on any cabinet changes.

In Ottawa yesterday it was being predicted that the Guest letter published by the Colonist might be enough to postpone any action on Mr. Pearkes' retirement.

The defence minister, who has carried perhaps the heaviest burden in the Diefenbaker government, has been the central figure in a year of reports and rumors of impending cabinet changes.

Leaders Tiff in Laos Emergency Declared

SAIGON, Viet Nam (AP)—Radio Vientiane reported today that Premier Prince Souvanna Phouma has proclaimed a state of emergency in neighboring Laos.

Gen. Ouane Rathikoune, commander of the Royal Laotian army, was ordered to use military force to restore peace in the strife-torn country.

Move came in the wake of anti-Communist vice-premier Gen. Phoumi Nosavan's refusal to join the new neutralist government.

Polls Open 8 to 8

Tomorrow's the Day When B.C. Decides

British Columbia voters will have their say tomorrow in the 12 hours between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. when polls will be open to record votes in the provincial election.

First indication of results will come from returning offices about 8:30 p.m., but it will likely be about 9:30 before any trend appears.

Colonist readers are invited to telephone EV 3-4111 for the latest figures. Full details will be published in Tuesday morning's edition of The Daily Colonist.

In multiple ridings, such as Victoria, which has three seats in the legislature, voters should mark an "X" against three of the 12 names. Votes do not have to be cast for candidates belonging to any one party.

In single-seat ridings, as most ridings are, voters should put an "X" against only one name.

All liquor stores in the province will be closed all day tomorrow. All other liquor outlets will be closed between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m.

(Reprinted from January 20, 1957)

PEOPLE at the bus stop hunch themselves into their coats. The snow is coming down in big, wet flakes. Every now and then a strip of snow falls off a wire or a sign and flops on the sidewalk.

A girl with a scarf tied over her head retreats into a shop door. She looks up the street in that stiff, scared way that some people have when it is snowing—as though she was afraid her bones would break if she moved too suddenly.

But her eyes move sideways to inspect the others at the bus stop—brown female eyes that look warm under her snowy scarf. Flakes settle in her eyebrows. She senses a man looking at her, and assumes a blank expression, turning the eyes up the street where the bus should be.

Two lads in mackinaws are throwing snowballs at each other, shouting insults in voices that waver from soprano to tenor. They wind up elaborately for each throw, consciously showing off, trying to make a small entertainment for a group of teenage girls, who are not taking much notice.

Another lad joins in, a rangy youth in a brown jacket, who fires a barrage of snowballs, dodges around a lamppost and peers from behind it with bird-like eagerness, then launches into a loose-limbed sliding run and pushes a companion in the gutter.

A smaller boy is amusing himself by packing snowballs, tossing them in the air and trying to make them land on his head. "Look, Mummy," he says.

His mother, an anxious woman with a creased face, gives him an encouraging smile. But she is chiefly concerned to keep her sodden parcels from falling to pieces.

A young couple, all bundled up except for their bare hands, which are twined together, look in a jeweler's window. A chilled-looking paper boy, nursing a couple of newspapers which are soaking wet and surely unsaleable, utters a series of odd cries, which sound like: "Redeem Ruxy! Redoop."

A bus draws up. It seems to be the one that most of the people are waiting for. They plod and slither up to the door. The rangy lad in the brown jacket flings a last snowball, and manages to lose his dime in the process.

The other people file into the bus, a warm haven on wheels. The lad in the brown jacket miraculously grubs in the snow and recovers his coin, jumps up the steps, and the bus rumbles away into the night.

Your Good Health

Stuttering By No Means Sign of Mental Illness

By JOSEPH G. MOLNER, MD

"Dear Dr. Molner: I either inherited or developed a stutter. Because of it I have been considered mentally ill. Some well-known people have stuttered and overcome it.

"For many years I could talk very well with only an occasional blunder. Now I am having trouble again, mostly with the letter 'T'.

"I am a woman of 55 and must work to support myself and my 80-year-old mother. My work doesn't require much talking, but I hate to be considered a lunatic because of this slight condition. And I have noticed that other people flub a letter now and then, and they don't seem disturbed.

"I lost my father when I was 10, and in grade school, so my speech did not cause me difficulty in learning, but later my aunt and uncle took a very dim view of giving me any higher education. In fact my aunt tried to have me put in an asylum when I was 16.

"The doctors remarked that my people were just trying to get rid of me. My aunt even got on her knees to beg them to change their minds, but they only shook their heads and left the house.

"Nobody ever liked me because of my speech. I have had to do menial jobs most of my life, or factory work. I am not a happy person because of the life I was given. I sincerely pray that in the future there will be no people as despised as me.—N.C."

This letter evidently was written to me because of a reference I made to stuttering. There seems to be no request in it for my advice, but only an eloquent plea for understanding.

Stuttering is by no means a sign of being mentally ill. Indeed many stutters are brilliant, sensitive people. There are signs to make us suspect that this sensitivity may, indeed, be a cause of stuttering. The individual thinks so fast and so far in advance of what he wants to say, that the physical act of speaking can't keep up. Or such is the plausible hypothesis.

NERVOUS MANIFESTATION

Stuttering is a physical manifestation of nervousness. An unwanted child, knowing it is unwanted, may try so hard to please that he stutters. Or a child of whom too much is expected may also, by trying too hard, stutter.

Or a child brought up in an atmosphere of tension of some other sort may develop a stutter. There are any number of possibilities.

Sheer will power isn't too likely to cure stuttering, because it increases the tension. More likely to help, if the patient can do it, is relaxing a bit. Taking things easier. If you realize that a little pause before saying a letter isn't really important, you relax and things come easier!

I wonder if that might not be N.C.'s trouble. Obviously she has worried about this most of her life. If only she could realize that people don't dislike her, don't disrespect her, because of the stutter; or if she could establish in her mind that it doesn't really matter what they think, because she's obviously a very nice person; then the stutter might well begin to subside. I defy anyone, on the basis of her letter, to do other than respect her and like her. She's a nice, unhappy person. Let's pray that she may become a nice happy person.

"Dear Dr. Molner: In your discussion of 'staph' infection you said it can be quite stubborn. What sort of antiseptic might help ward it off?"—D.M.

Antiseptic detergents containing hexachlorophene are helpful in eradicating staph. Your druggist, I'm sure, can help you with this.

"Dear Dr. Molner: I have a skin condition called vitiligo, and I am taking medication twice a day. Any information will be welcome.—J.C."

Vitiligo is a mysterious condition, causing white or light spots in the skin. Medication sometimes helps, but it isn't certain. In some cases the trouble ends spontaneously. The most welcome news to most sufferers is this: it isn't dangerous.

Weapons Laid Down UN Gaining Control

Cease-Fire Ordered Invaders Withdraw

LEOPOLDVILLE (Reuters) — The Congolese army ordered a general cease-fire throughout the Congo Saturday and it appeared the United Nations was gaining complete control of the crisis-racked republic.

In a series of rapid-fire developments:

- The UN disclosed a general cease-fire had been ordered, including breakaway Katanga province. The UN will set up a supervisory organization to patrol Katanga's borders with Kivu and Kasai provinces.
- The Congolese army laid down its arms around Leopoldville with chief-of-staff Col. Joseph Mobutu, a supporter of President Joseph Kasavubu, carrying out the action.
- The UN announced it had used its funds to pay the Congolese soldiers, who had not received any money in two months.
- Reports from Katanga said invading Congolese forces had withdrawn from the country.
- Premier Patrice Lumumba appeared at a press conference without his usual guard of Congolese soldiers.

Who Rules Congo Now?

The swift changes left correspondents and many Congolese asking the key question: Who now rules the Congo?

The UN spokesman declined to say who had ordered the cease-fire.

The spokesman said a UN supervisory organization headed by Swedish Col. S. M. Möller would fly today to set up patrols along the Kasai-Kivu-Katanga borders. The team will be equipped with helicopters and radio-controlled jeeps.

Military Police Still Armed

The orders were carried out by Mobutu, and troops around Leopoldville handed in their weapons to their officers. Soldiers were on the streets of Leopoldville without arms, although military police still carried weapons.

Reports from breakaway Katanga Province said three Congolese, part of the invading central Congolese government force, were killed in a clash with Katanga forces Friday in the northern part of the province. Later the Congolese withdrew across the border.

Eye on Elephants

Pygmies Stay Aloof

By GEORGE DRAPER

MAMBASA, Congo (TNS) — Amili Puswa, self-styled Prince of the Pygmies, declared here that the little people of the jungle plan to remain aloof from the squabbles plaguing the Congolese government.

In an exclusive interview, Puswa said he had never heard of Congolese independence or of Premier Patrice Lumumba.

"Independence—what is it?" he asked.

The monarch said the best and only news he has received recently was that a large elephant had been reported bashing through the forest only one day's march from his camp.

Prince Puswa and his people are the hunters of the vast jungle of the eastern Congo.

A reception committee of 30 baboons greeted us at the approach to Prince Puswa's rest camp deep in the jungle.

They were sitting in a circle, chattering like so many women, but when they saw our safari truck, they galloped down the road to notify the pygmy chieftain.

Puswa, consequently, was awaiting our arrival in his ceremonial robes consisting of a breechcloth no larger than a playing card. He is a mighty little man standing three feet, two inches tall.

Puswa had been gnawing on the hind leg of a baby antelope just before we arrived and, after a few strained moments of introduction, he returned to his feast.

What did he think of the Congo's Premier Patrice Lumumba?

"Lumumba? Who is he?" he asked in return.

Puswa women attended the reception in good humor, wearing their finest birthday suits and breechcloths for the occasion. They giggled and laughed at the presence of a clothed white man twice their height.

There are about five men and 12 women and six children women, but when they saw

Apparently on the winning side in the Congo's upheavals is Premier Moïse Tshombe of Katanga Province, whose conflicts with Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba led to an attempt to secede. Lumumba now appears to have lost power, and cooler heads are prevailing in the new African nation.—(AP Photofax.)

Russia Tells UN:

Can't Prevent Us From Aiding Congo

MOSCOW (AP)—The Soviet Union told the UN Saturday there is nothing to prevent it giving aid to the Congo government if it wants to.

A note to this effect was delivered to Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjöld. Tass news agency said the note added:

"The aid to the government of the Republic of the Congo in the form of civil aircraft and trucks not only does not contradict the Security Council's resolution on the Congo but is in complete accordance with it."

Take Parents To Court Cyclists Told

Parents of careless young cyclists in Victoria can expect to accompany their sons or daughters to court if a traffic infraction summons is issued.

Chief John Blackstock said there are far too many complaints of infractions against cyclists and it is up to the parents to make the children obey the traffic laws.

"Those children who are caught will have to bring their parents to court with them," he said.

Pin Draws Blood, Gasps But Subject Feels Nothing

By ROBERT STARKIE

TORONTO (TNS) — A doctor plunged a pin into my hand, drawing blood from me and gasps from a roomful of people. But I didn't feel a thing, because I had been hypnotized.

I was "put under" by Dr. J. Woodward of Birmingham, England, who specializes in medical hypnotism, as a demonstration to other doctors attending the second World Congress of Anesthesiologists.

Present during the demonstration were U.S. and Canadian doctors who were frankly skeptical of hypnosis. Now they are interested in learning more about it.

Though hypnosis will abolish pain by itself, it is used more generally in conjunction with local or general anesthetics.

Dentists have been using hypnosis in England for some years with great success especially for painful fillings and as a means of keeping the mouth dry.

AVOIDS INJURY

Hypnosis is often used where anesthetics might injure the patient, and when prompt discharge from the hospital after the operation is required.

Dr. Woodward said hypnosis is a most useful adjunct to the anesthetist to avoid surgery and childbirth pain.

Blood, Hairs Found In Seattle Mystery

SEATTLE (AP)—Splattered specks of blood and human hairs were examined by police Saturday for some clue to the disappearance of a 39-year-old mother and her 18-year-old daughter more than five months ago.

A crew of four detectives found the blood as they searched the antique shop-house once occupied by Raoul Guy Rockwell, 36, his wife Manzanita and her daughter, Dolores Mearns.

Human remains, those of a girl from 18 to 20, were found in the septic tank under the house, and two legs from the body of a woman resembling Mrs. Rockwell's description were found in the Columbia River.

Rockwell divorced Manzanita in July on grounds of desertion, and days later married Evelyn Emerson, 41, then left her.

Her stepmother, Mrs. Clifford Walker, complained that Rockwell bilked her out of $10,000 she loaned him to buy Indian artifacts in B.C. Rockwell is being sought on a grand larceny warrant.

The Choice

BRITISH Columbia voters tomorrow have to make up their minds whether to continue the services of an experienced government, entrust their destinies to either of two unknown quantities, or turn socialist. The latter they are unlikely to do. The CCF may increase its strength because of the new CCF-Labor tie-up, although the extent of this influence is problematical. British Columbians as a whole are not in favor of socialism, however; they have no wish to encourage the totalitarian trends which are an accompaniment of statism. B.C.'s best bet is still the general exercise of free enterprise.

Both Liberals and Conservatives have the handicap of lack of parliamentary experience. The former had but two representatives in the Legislature when it was dissolved, the latter none. Neither of the leaders of these groups has ever sat in the legislature. The voters are thus asked by both Liberals and Conservatives to elect as premier a candidate without knowledge of or intimacy with the problems of legislation.

It is in the legislature that a politician should serve his apprenticeship; this is the proving ground for all aspirants aiming to head a government. The idea will be anathema to them but it would have served these parties better to have had a saw-off during the current election. In this way they might each have won enough seats to warrant presentation of themselves at the next election as an alternative government. As it is they represent for voters a venture into the dark.

The Social Credit government has not been free of faults, although no government ever is. It tends towards bombast and undue secrecy and is apt to let its vision run away with it. But in the main it has given good government; it has been enterprising and got things done; its desire to boost and consolidate the prosperity of B.C. cannot be denied.

Above all it has the experience and background of eight years in executive office, and there seems to be no slackening of its vigor. This should weigh heavily with the voters tomorrow.

Nevertheless it would not come amiss if the election resulted in a stronger combined opposition, no matter how it is made up. The best government comes when one party does not have things too much its own way.

At Odds with Canada

THE United States' attitude regarding any move toward disarmament seems to be completely at odds with the policy advocated by the Canadian government.

Canada's view is that it is the clear responsibility of all other countries, including herself, to demand that the two big powers end the threat of nuclear war which hangs over the people of the world today.

Despite the general approbation afforded this suggestion from all corners of the globe, the American state department has given it a cool reception. The reason for this may be that the United States fears any such move might give the Soviet Union an opportunity to stage an anti-Western propaganda spree.

Secretary of State Christian Herter, in fact, used these very words in summarily rejecting Soviet Premier Khrushchev's call for an 82-nation summit meeting at the United Nations.

He went even further—he denounced the proposal as being "ludicrous in the extreme."

Such an uncompromising attitude neither eases world tensions nor recognizes that other UN member-nations also possess the ability of interpreting Mr. Khrushchev's motives.

Although it is entirely possible that the Soviet premier has some underhand purpose for making such a move, it is the view of Canadian government officials that Russia is sincere in its support of disarmament.

Whichever deduction is correct the United States would have little to lose and perhaps much to gain in going along with any proposition that brings nearer the ultimate goal of ridding the world of the threat of nuclear war.

National pride must be rejected if it stands in the way.

Victims of Progress

ULTIMATELY the machine of urbanization, with its tax bills, overtakes the owner of house property no matter how far out he moves from the metropolitan centre. Some home truths on that score were imparted at an election meeting in one of the areas of Saanich by Public Works Minister Chant.

"You can have anything you want if you pay for it," said Mr. Chant, with the candor and courage the subject needs. Then he went on to point out the inevitability of tax increases in areas which, once sparsely settled, blossom into fully built-up housing neighborhoods.

Saanich, once a mixed rural-suburban district where taxes were negligible, attracted those in search of cheap living. At the same time succeeding councils, pressed for revenue, used every device to encourage building. They got their wish—and the bills are now being presented.

Unpaved tracks which served well enough 10 or 20 years back now have to be paved; there must be lighting at night; sidewalks are necessary in the densest areas and, above all, for health reasons there must be sewers in places which at the beginning could get along safely with septic tanks.

All this has to be written off to progress, or something which passes for it. But it is brutal to the earlier inhabitants who built there for the sake of low taxes—not just to evade a civic responsibility but because they could not afford to pay urban taxes. There are hundreds of them not only in Saanich but in other municipalities and unorganized regions; old people mostly, whose incomes have stood still or even retreated while taxes have marched upward.

They are the tragic figures of this change in the character of Victoria's fringe areas, for while the owners of homes in expensive new subdivisions may find service taxes annoying, those powerless to save themselves from the forces of inflation face the loss of homes they have struggled to hold together.

Romance of Our Hymns . . .

. . . by Kathleen Blanchard

'There Is a City Bright'

MARY Ann Gibson, whose life was chiefly spent in Hull, England, was born in 1813.

At 30, she married Rev. John Deck, vicar of the large working class parish of St. Stephen's, Hull, which contained some 1,300 parishioners.

There was much to do and Mrs. Deck was very happy. Her very particular work was the Sunday School. She realized that if she could attract the children, she had won half the battle. It was the custom for the vicar to keep the first Sunday in the new year as a children's festival. Competitions were held and prizes given to fortunate winners.

At this time, there were not many hymns suitable for children. So Amy, Mrs. Deck's daughter, wrote the first verse of the hymn given, and her mother finished it. It was then printed on an illuminated card, and each child was given a copy. They sang it to a well-known tune.

It is interesting to know that Amy became famous all over the world as an authoress of note (later known as Mrs. G. F. Walton). One of her well-known stories, "Christie's Old Organ," is centred around the hymn. The story is of an old organ grinder who lived in the top attic of a miserable rooming house. Friendless and alone, he loved his organ more than anything in the world. It played three tunes: "Home Sweet Home" was his favorite.

The waif (little Christie), heard the old man play, and thought that the organ was the sweetest thing in the world—because when his mother was sick those were her last words, "Home Sweet Home." Christie, having nowhere to go, followed the old organ grinder to his attic, and he was allowed to sleep on the floor.

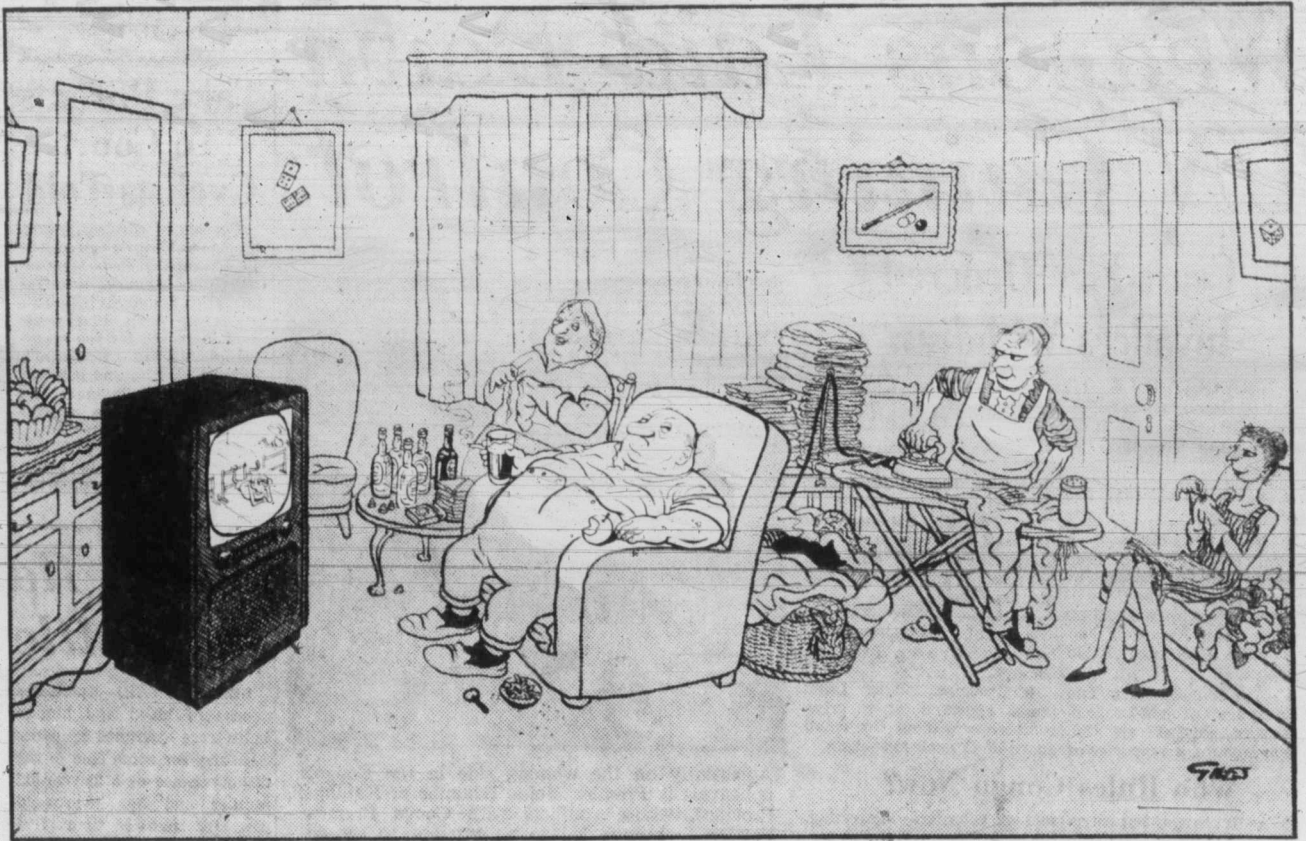

One Sunday evening the ragged boy peeped into a church to hear the singing. Gaining courage, he entered an empty pew, and was fascinated by the preacher. Then a hymn was sung. Distinctly he heard the words from a young woman in the next pew:

There is a city bright,
Closed are its gates to sin,
Nought that defileth,
Nought that defileth
Can ever enter in.

Saviour I come to Thee,
O Lamb of God, I pray,
Cleanse me and save me,
Cleanse me and save me,
Wash all my sins away.

Lord make me from this hour
Thy loving child to be,
Kept by Thy power,
Kept by Thy power,
From all that grieveeth Thee.

Till in the snowy dress
Of Thy redeemed I stand
Faultless and stainless,
Faultless and stainless,
Safe in that happy land.

"Hark who's tellings us the trouble with our Olympic team was that they didn't train hard enough."

Thinking Aloud

... of shoes—and ships—and sealing wax—of cabbages and kings."

By TOM TAYLOR

A correspondent of the Manchester Guardian who was present at the Powers trial in Moscow wonders if the unfortunate American pilot had been brainwashed. He found him an enigma, partly submissive and partly independent, and thought the trial had an artificial air, as though Soviet officials had planned how it would proceed and knew there would be no untoward explosion from the dock.

It would be subtly done, he writes, to induce just the right demerour in Powers and not enough to make him seem unnatural.

Brainwashing, I suppose, can be in whole or in part, depending on who is doing the washing. This is a modern term given to a process designed to turn a person inside out and make his mind responsive only to one influence. It is the sinister application of the art in recent years that has made it something to fear, for in unscrupulous hands it can be a diabolical art, as Koreans and other examples have made clear.

In a lesser sense—meaning one not deliberately directed to possessing a man's soul as well as his mind—brainwashing must be considered as old as man himself. Put in more pleasant phraseology it is the persuasion by argument of a point of view, a philosophy or the merits of a commodity. Millions of people have their brains partially washed every night as they watch television, not only through gradual acceptance of violence as part of the social scene but by the cigarette, detergent, cosmetic or other commercials that run riot.

The trick obviously is to ram home a message so that it will clear a corner in the TV watcher's mind for it to take root as a permanent resident. That means the elimination of such independent judgment as formerly held sway in this space. The Madison Avenue technique cannot be accused of trying to change a man's character—although it may change his habits, or rob him of his soul, but it aims by repetition to make him subconsciously favor the commodity advertised. Nothing else could excuse some of the morose and rudely interrupting commercials that are extant. And in reality there is no excuse.

Hitler, unfortunately, discovered in major fashion the secret of repetition, no matter how grandiose or ridiculous the statements he made, and his example has been variously followed even if from less dangerous motives. We are all subject to mental infiltration, and if we hear gobbledygook often enough some of it sticks in the back of our minds in spite of conscious resistance. The subconscious is our master.

One could submit, amusedly and not in the sense of a Powers trial, that the current election campaign has been a fine attempt at brainwashing. And of course it has, collectively. Each political party has endeavored to create in the voter's mind a sympathetic response to its cause; so that the voter when he goes to the polls will automatically put his cross in a certain place. The saving grace has been that the arguments have been conflicting as well as repetitive, and in the realm of brainwashing they cancel one another out, or tend to do so. None can have taken sole possession of the independent listening mind. The subconscious can scarcely be washed four different ways at the same time.

It is the complexity of the modern world that makes brainwashing of any kind difficult to resist, either in innocent or sinister form. One can feel sympathy for a Powers placed in a terrible predicament when one knows few of us can wholly shake off the insidious intrusion of influences that good sense urges us to deny.

Africa and the Queen

Paradox of Friendly Hostility

By DUART FARQUHARSON from London

CANADIANS who think that the legacy of British imperialism in darkest Africa is something less than happy will not be suffered gladly by Canada's best-known historian, Prof. Donald Creighton, when he returns to Toronto this month.

After travelling more than 6,000 miles throughout the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland as a member of the Monckton Commission, Prof. Creighton has one abiding impression. "The devotion of the African native to the Queen has to be seen to be believed. Any ideas to the contrary are strictly North American myths."

The biographer of Sir John A. Macdonald says he will never forget the words of a humble African who came before the Monckton Commission in a remote village. The man knew nothing of the constitution or economic complexities of federation; he had only one thing to say to the interpreter.

"My grandfather lived in peace, my father lived in peace and I want to live in peace. And I want to live under the protection of the Queen. That is all I want to say."

Unemployment Fund

(From The Ottawa Journal)

A report from Parliament Hill tells of the government studying a "drastic overhaul" of unemployment insurance.

Just what is involved in this "drastic overhaul," we do not know.

What we would like to think, however, is that the overhaul, if it is happening, will include a sharp look at the way in which unemployment insurance is administered.

For there is widespread belief all over Canada that unemployment insurance is being abused, that too many people have been claiming and getting unemployment insurance payments without being entitled to them.

If such a situation actually exists—and we have a strong suspicion that Prof. Creighton is unable at present to give his views on the constitutional future of the Central African Federation. He and the 23 other commissioners working under Lord Monckton hope to complete their report early in September for submission to the British and federation governments.

But he speaks with enthusiasm of his African adventures. "Never did I work so hard or encounter such wholehearted hospitality," he says. "Although African nationalist groups boycotted its hearings, Prof. Creighton feels that the commission was put in touch with every viewpoint. In some villages it was met by Africans, usually women, carrying supposedly hostile placards.

"But they were pretty good-natured demonstrations," he says. "The women couldn't seem to help smiling. The slogans on their banners were hardly angry: 'Monck go home' or 'We don't want any Monckey business here.'"

The professor tells a story, laughable were it not tragic, which illustrates the problem of nationalism for the uneducated African masses.

An African worker, like thousands of his fellows, had bought the so-called deed to his European master's property from a nationalist agent. One day the European told him he was leaving.

"But Bwana, you can't go," implored the African.

"Why not?" asked the European. "Haven't you already paid money to have my property when I leave?"

"Oh yes," said the African. "But if you leave who is going to tell us what to do?"

Prof. Creighton, like the other commissioners, has been deeply concerned at recent events in the Congo. He says that should a similar outpouring of the European population occur in the Central African Federation it would spell disaster. "The federation must be multi-racial or the whole structure is going to collapse."

The Monckton Commission is not the professor's first experience in advising governments on federal reform. Before the Second World War he was a research assistant for Canada's Rowell-Sirois Commission. In studying the Rhodesian Federation he never ceases coming across Canadian parallels.

But lest the Canadian comparison mislead the score of Commonwealth correspondents trying to pry open the tenor of the coming report Prof. Creighton is quick to point out that the problems of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland are very different.

"As any of my students know," he says, "I am a centralist when it comes to the Canadian constitution. Rhodesia is another matter."

When Prof. Creighton returns to the University of Toronto in September his students can expect to hear not only about Sir John A. Macdonald. He has already written to some of his colleagues that Canadians should pay more academic attention to Africa.

The Packsack

OF GREGORY CLARK

A beautiful friendship among some friends of mine was temporarily ruined by gossip. The gossip was the work of one of those compulsive gossips who is, in fact, a psychiatric case. There are people, both women and men (though women as a rule get most of the blame), to whom collecting and distributing gossip is a more or less damaging kind of obsession on a par with collecting antiques, being a Communist, eating garlic or studying public speaking.

The particular gossip involved in this case was a man. He is a devoted employee, a devoted church worker, a faithful husband and kind father. But he is also the most poisonous gossip for miles in all directions. He feels it his duty to pick up what he hears and pass it on. He calls it honesty, frankness, candor.

It was a parson who saved the situation.

"The thing to realize about gossips," he told the parties involved, "is that they are great fun. When you identify a gossip, make the most of it. When he or she passes on to you a piece of choice old Limburger, immediately get in touch with the other party involved, and inform them. Encourage gossips. Egg them on. Nothing will cure gossip quicker than the discovery that they are the objects of general amusement. As a matter of fact, most gossips are unaware of the fact that they are, among their acquaintances, comic figures."

Grilse Fishing

I would like to draw attention to the new regulation which makes it illegal to take grilse (young salmon) less than 12 inches in length. I have fished in these waters for many years and you will always catch grilse when fishing for salmon with any but the largest lures and very few will be 12 inches in length. You are allowed eight fish per day per person; four may be salmon, three pounds or over, or you may have up to eight grilse with no salmon.

In a day's fishing now you will have to throw back many small fish and it is my contention only a few survive the handling and unhooking; some will swim away minus many scales, torn jaws, gills, eyes, etc., to die later. Would it not be better to take eight fish per person and then quit instead of slaughtering grilse all day in the hope of getting large fish?

I kept careful check last week with three in the boat and we released 37 grilse, most of which would not survive. We brought home two small salmon about 4 to 5 pounds and four grilse of legal size—six fish, two less than the legal catch for one person. If we had kept the legal catch we could have had 24 fish. None would have been released to die as the seven over would not have been caught and released.

There are many hundreds of boats out every day at this time of the year and the numbers of grilse released every day to die must be very great. Why not make it eight fish per person and then quit and give the grilse a chance to grow into salmon?

Government Insurance

What a pleasure it has been driving on our highways for the past few months. So different from the winter months when the ice and snow are on the roads, ignored for want of responsible action, causing numerous accidents.

But why should the government worry? The accidents don't cost them anything. Nor does it cost the insurance companies any more. They just boost the rates. The answer seems to be government-run car insurance as advocated by the CCF, then the government would be quite interested in keeping the roads in shape and accident rates low.

What Do We Gain?

Having read the letter written by newcomer C. Kirk—well, I am a newcomer. I have lived in B.C. many years and some of my ancestors long before me. I have seen governments come and go, but I never experienced one like this one.

I'd like to bring back some of the old ones, like the Hon. "Honest John" Oliver who was our premier. He didn't have millions for sales tax, drivers' licences. He didn't make millions on liquor. There were no government liquor stores; one could go to the Hudson's Bay Store and purchase a bottle of good Scotch without water and for much less money.

You people who don't own property think we who do own property are lucky in receiving the home owners' grant. Yes, it's given to us by the government, but the city gets it back in taxes, so what do we gain?

Mr. Bennett objected to Mr. Anscomb when he was a Conservative member introducing the 3 per cent sales tax. When he became premier, did he take the tax off? No he added two more, making it 5 per cent. That might seem very little to some people, but to an old-age pensioner it means very much.

I could write much more, but I might hurt them.

Cause of Freedom

There has been a lot of talk this election about the "freedom of the individual." What individual, is not specified. In this day of ever-spreading monopolistic control and psychological advertising, this phrase is bound to be suspect.

As owners of a small business under the free enterprise system, we would simply like to say that we would sooner trust our independent future to the moral platform of the CCF than to the time-tattered policies of the other parties. Only the CCF is dedicated to freedom for all individuals, based on moral law.

Discussion Stifled

As chief law officer of the Crown, our attorney-general has no right to sit in judgment of his fellow citizens as to their right to discuss the Sommers case, although understandable that he would want to hear the last of the sordid case.

As is quite obvious, Social Credit does not keep us informed as they so bombastically advertise, except where it suits them to do so.

All through the years there has been no opportunity for public discussion and the A-G still desires to stifle all expression of public opinion.

CCF Misrepresentation

I notice that once again Tommy Douglas has been carrying on his campaign of misrepresentation in the interests of the CCF.

He did that in Edmonton at the time of the 1948 election when he claimed that the CCF government had made a greater reduction in the Saskatchewan debt in four years than the Social Credit government of Alberta had in 13 years. The truth of the matter was that the federal government reduced the Saskatchewan debt by $66,000,000 by wiping out entirely treasury bills for $36,000,000, both principal and interest, and giving the provincial government unlimited time to pay the other $30,000,000 and cancelling all interest. That is how the CCF government reduced its debt.

When Mr. Douglas claims that the population of Saskatchewan has not been decreasing, I would like to correct him. The Canada Year Book shows that the Saskatchewan population in 1931 was 921,785, and in 1960, 910,000. Since the CCF government took office in 1944 the population dropped steadily until 1958 and has since been rising much more slowly than neighboring provinces.

The oil economy should not be forgotten. In 1950 Mr. Douglas was proclaiming "Saskatchewan is the hottest oil spot on the North American continent." Maybe it was, but the CCF policies prevented its development and the benefits accruing to the people of Saskatchewan have been less than one-tenth that derived by the people of Alberta, where the prospecting crews journeyed after being discouraged by the expediency policies of the socialist government.

In Capital of U.S.By RON COLLISTER
From Washington

This is an integrated city, so-called—but I have no doubt that if my wife and I entered a colored Washingtonian in our apartment, a pretext would soon be found to evict us.

Only colored maids, messengers, milkmen and the like can pass into the lobbies of the swank all-white apartment blocks of Washington.

The colored people, in the majority and spanning every level and profession, have become accustomed to this sectional living.

But for colored diplomats and visitors from abroad, the introduction to the capital city of the western world is usually a humiliating ordeal.

For example, four African students were barred at the door of an apartment house where a young white woman who is interested in Africa was giving a party for them. The would-be hostess was given an eviction notice.

The students, ironically, were touring the country under a State Department program to give them a good impression of the U.S. In the flurry of

From London

They call it the "villa fantastic." It took six years and £400,000 to build. It is owned by a Canadian millionaire, Sir Duncan Orr-Lewis, and it commands a handsome sweep of the Riviera from Antibes to Cannes.

The Evening Standard says the villa was built by a Romanian architect "who designed palaces for the late King Carol and never lost the habit."

The London newspaper adds that Sir Duncan hasn't been near the place for nearly a year, though his Russian-born fourth wife lives there in a small bedroom over the garage.

Sir Duncan has lived outside Canada for many years, but retains membership in a Montreal club. His mother, the former Maud Helen Booth, was from London, Ont. Sir Duncan is 62.

Oncoming Depression?

The Shame of Loose Talk

By NATE WHITE
In The Christian Science Monitor

The nation once again is running serious risks with loose talk about an oncoming depression. It is time to stop the talk to examine the reasons which have produced it, and correct the trouble.

Some simple things need to be understood. The fault is not with the stock market, which has been on a steady decline all summer. The stock market records the end result of people's thinking. It is an effect and not a cause.

But the market becomes a cause inadvertently when members of the brokerage and investor community accept the evidence of the ticker tape without question as a sign of an oncoming depression.

Having thus accepted the ticker-tape story, and adding to it their own superstitions and concerns, the investing community then becomes a maelstrom of fearful forecasts which send counter-waves through the economy, thus affecting both investors and others negatively.

Just now the New York brokerage community is besieged with superstitions, weird projections, and a multiplicity of fears.

Unfortunately, a 1943 political-economic projection for 25 years is now circulating in the street. The man who made the projection long since has disappeared from the street, but someone unearthed his projection and is circulating it. It forecasts, among other things, a seven-year depression beginning in January, 1961.

Another weird superstition stems from one broker's concern with earthquakes and volcanic eruptions. By some quirk, seismism is then accepted as a key to the stock market, and more forecasts of doom and gloom emerge.

Then, too, the sunspot theorists and those who trace human behaviour to the pull of the moon are always with us.

Add to this witch's concoction, the Walter P. Reuther advice to presidential candidate John F. Kennedy—warning of a recession in 1961, with its attendant publicity—and

Red Giants
May Meet
This YearBy WENDELL S. MERICK
From Hong Kong

Diplomatic sources expect the two giants of Communism—Mao Tse-tung and Nikita Khrushchev—to hold a private summit meeting within the next two months.

A Mao-Khrushchev conference would appear to be the only means of resolving the growing Sino-Soviet ideological dispute. If they do not meet soon it will be powerful evidence that the ideological chasm is widening to truly dangerous proportions.

There have been reports that Soviet Russia has invited Red China to a conference in either November or December, presumably in Moscow. If the Chinese decided to accept such an invitation they could do so under the guise of attending the October revolution anniversary.

But Peiping's present mood does not suggest the Chinese would humble themselves in any way by going to Moscow. Mao's position in the ideological controversy is that Russia and other Communist regimes are the deviationists from Marxism-Leninism.

The story crosses a news paper's production desk every day that production costs in the United States are too high. This means labor costs, as well as distributive, marketing and sales costs.

Does this mean that there must be a shakeout and shakedown in wages, as many argue? Or does it mean a step up in product competitiveness, an increase in automatic process, and better marketing and sales techniques? Wage cuts are depressive. The question must be looked at from all sides.

No single answer exists. But many answers do exist. The ignored economic problem multiplies. But individual miseries in getting at specific business problems and handling them produces answers.

Acceptance of depression talk and forecasts of depression conditions is an unworthy as well as an unproductive exercise these days.

'Cheap Political Trick' Ascribed to McMahon

VANCOUVER (CP)—CCF Leader Robert Strachan said yesterday Frank McMahon of Westcoast Transmission Company Ltd. pulled "one of the cheapest political tricks in B.C. history."

Mr. Strachan was commenting on a statement by Mr. McMahon Friday that he does not believe that money for B.C.'s natural gas and oil development could be raised if a CCF or a minority government were elected in tomorrow's election.

Mr. Strachan said in a statement: "Mr. McMahon has suggested to the voters of British Columbia that unless they return a strong Social Credit government, he will pick up his marbles and go home."

"He has put a gun to the heads of the voters and said to them 'Vote as I tell you or I will blast you.'"

'Rough Patch' Ahead

Nehru's Stock Drops

He's a Great Idealist But India Needs Leader

By PATRICK J. KILLEN

NEW DELHI (UPI)—Time is beginning to run out on Jawaharlal Nehru.

This is a view shared by a small but growing number of parliamentarians, intellectuals and qualified observers in the Indian capital. Disregarding the often-repeated question, "After Nehru, who or what?" they prefer to pose this problem.

"How long can India afford a great and noble idealist when it needs a hardheaded, able administrator?"

SLOWED DOWN

These observers are troubled by the contentions that Nehru has slowed down during the past few years, that he has been deeply hurt by criticism and that his leadership has become uneven.

The situation may seem more acute at present when India is running into what one diplomat termed a "rough patch." Current problems include major language disputes, student indiscipline, economic discontentment and the now constant spectre of Red China on the northern borders.

SHAKEN

Nevertheless, the past two years seem to have shaken Nehru at a time when he would like to contemplate better things. At 70, instead of still being the undisputed panjiri (great teacher), he is being criticized as never before.

A few years ago to criticize Nehru openly was to invite violence. Today, it is open season on the prime minister with press, opposition members and to an undisclosed extent, his own Congress party colleagues joining in.

DIDN'T TELL

The majority of the criticism is traceable to Nehru's avowed co-operative farming policy and his failure to tell Parliament about Chinese incursions for two years.

In spite of the criticism, most people still regard Nehru as one of India's principal assets. Certainly there is no prospective crown-prince who has his stature or following among the masses.

At the same time, most diplomats and journalists who have spent much time here, agree on one thing: If Nehru stepped down tomorrow, India would not collapse.

MORE ABLE

It is perhaps significant that those mentioned most often as possible successors are considered more able administrators. They include Finance Minister Morarji Desai, 64, and Food and Agriculture Minister S. K. Patil, 60.

Unless an unforeseen illness occurs, there is little likelihood of any sudden change. Nehru has said in recent months that he has no present intention of retiring.

One thing is certain. Nehru can remain Prime Minister as long as he wants to.

He agreed, however, with the United Church Observer, the church's official publication, which criticized "illiterate and puritanical book-burners who publicize and condemn things they haven't read."

Bornographic books and magazines can poison the minds of the young and immature, he said. Only means of censorship would be boards, carefully chosen for the purpose.

He was against unrestrained freedom in literature. "Other values must be considered, values as important as freedom."

Liberals' Public 'Thinking' Poor Tactics, Pros Believe

John D. Sits Back,
Watches Carefully

OTTAWA (CP)—How much thinking out loud should a political party's thinkers do?

Some old pros at the political game think the answer will be a clear and tart "not much" when Parliament meets again and the Liberal party's front benchers come face to face with the Progressive Conservative cabinet ministers, particularly Prime Minister Diefenbaker.

MERE TRICKLE

Political news in the capital last week dwindled to a mere trickle, while the Liberal party's top brass went to Kingston, Ont., for a Study Conference on National Problems, sponsored but not organized by the Liberal party.

The Conservatives, with Mr. Diefenbaker the most interested observer, sat back to watch.

FORMER DEPUTY

The study conference was prompted by Opposition Leader Lester B. Pearson and organized by Mitchell Sharp, a former deputy minister under Liberal warhorse C. D. Howe.

Attended by 200 persons, it was intended to be a source of ideas for the Liberal party which will hold a policy convention here in January.

When the conference was called and January's party rally planned, the Liberal party apparently had no thought that an autumn session of Parliament might come between the two and there would be any prospect of an unusually early general election.

Now, the autumn session is a certainty, according to learned sources, and a 1961 election a distinct possibility.

The ideas that caught publicity at the Kingston meeting of Liberal thinkers are the ones that interest the Conservatives most. For example:

FREE TRADE UNION

Economic independence. The impression left by speakers is that economic integration with the United States would be a good thing and that Canada should promote and join a Trans-Atlantic customs and free trade union with Europe and the U.S.

Defence. Contrary to Liberal party policy so far, the "small" liberals thought Canada should not fear atomic weapons and that savings could be made in the defence budget if Canada would come round to the almost universally accepted principle of compulsory national service.

PASS ON PRICES

Prices. Some at the Kingston conference suggested government machinery to pass upon price levels, taking government control of the economy a step further than has ever been the rule in peacetime.

Conservative party thinking is being done in private and so far as can be learned the Conservatives have no thought of holding a matching public seminar.

IN PARLIAMENT

The result of the thinking on the Conservative side of the political fence will come out in Parliament, when government members will be looking for opportunities to quiz—and rib—the Liberal front-benchers on some of the ideas produced at Kingston.

Super Brand of Caviar May Follow Experiment

MOSCOW (AP)—Soviet scientists are breeding a new kind of sturgeon to produce a new super-brand of caviar. Tass said Saturday the scientists have crossed a sterlet—a small sturgeon from whose roe the finest caviar is made—with a Beluga, a big white sturgeon weighing almost a ton. The idea is to combine the flavor of the sterlet and the size of the Beluga.

U.K. May Join Trade Bloc

Commonwealth Won't Suffer

LONDON (CP)—Will the Commonwealth suffer if Britain joins the European Common Market?

The answer is, "not much," says the Economist Intelligence Unit, one of the country's leading economic research organizations.

In fact, adds the EIU, tighter European economic ties will likely either increase exports from individual Commonwealth countries or leave them largely unaffected.

The exceptions to this broad generalization are that sales of some food products, raw materials and a variety of small manufacturers may suffer as the moves toward European unity are fulfilled. Canada is among the countries selling these products.

These were the major conclusions of The Commonwealth and Europe, a 600-page analysis of the implications for the Commonwealth of the drive towards freer trade on the old Continent and the possible future participation by Britain in the common market.

Hosts Wilf and Betty Sadler said they were "in their glory" yesterday sponsoring the annual Protestant Orphanage picnic at Beaver Lake. The picnic is given each year by the Sadlers who "feel it is one of the main highlights of the year." For them. Here they are playing with Randy, 4, and Nina, 4.—(Ryan Studio photo.)

Rides, Hot Dogs, Games—Everything for Fun

— One of two highlights of the year for the children of the Protestant Orphanage, a picnic at Beaver Lake, was attended yesterday by 50 children.

In the words of an eight-year-old guest, "I have been thinking of this for many, many weeks, now when we go home tonight I can look forward to Christmas."

EVERYTHING FOR FUN

The picnic held annually by Mr. and Mrs. Wilf Sadler included everything young boys and girls enjoy, including boat rides, hot dogs, games, sand castle building and pony rides.

Mr. Sadler, along with Robin Stewart and Ed Anderson of the Saanich police department, who have contributed to the picnic each year, all agreed "it was something not to miss—it gives you a wonderful feeling to see these youngsters having fun," Mr. Anderson said.

SEVEN YEARS AGO

The Sadlers inaugurated the annual event seven years ago when they operated the Beaver Lake concession.

"We were so thankful for the help that Greater Victoria residents gave us in our business, we felt we had to do something, and we hit upon the idea of the orphanage picnic," Mr. Sadler said.

Think Twice on Neutrality Green Tells Canadians

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C. Minister Howard Green told CP—Canadians should think twice about being neutral in world affairs, External Affairs and Associated Alaskan Chambers of Commerce Friday night.

"It is not the Canadian character to be neutral," Mr. Green told 140 delegates at a banquet winding up the second day of the Associated Boards' 25th annual convention.

"We didn't build Canada by being neutral, we built it by taking a stand on vital issues," he said.

He said the suggestion that Canada would gain more friends in the United Nations if she were neutral was not valid because it would mean that Canada's neutrality would weaken the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The minister also said it would be unwise at the moment for Canada to recognize Communist China.

In the first place, he said, Red China will not accept recognition unless the Communists' right to Formosa is also recognized. In the second place, recognition by Canada or the United States would knock the props from under many millions of people in Asia who are "standing up to Red China."

Mr. Green said that Britain had been one of the first countries to recognize the Communist regime but it wasn't doing nearly as much trade with Peking as West Germany, which still hadn't extended recognition.

European Home-Building Spurt Good News for B.C. Lumbermen

The only bright spot on the horizon for the B.C. coastal lumber industry is the European market.

In Britain and on the continent a revival of housebuilding that started in 1959, has increased the demand for lumber, and although this is fractionally the Baltic lumber territory, B.C. has been getting its share of the market.

FOR FIRST TIME

Forest and Mill, the official organ of the B.C. lumber industry, says B.C. lumber has been sold to continental Europe for the first time in years, because the Baltic countries have not been able to meet the demand. The new market is doubly welcome because the housing slowdown in Canada and the United States is causing a pile-up of Pacific northwest lumber, and a consequent cutback in production.

SOFT MARKET

The United States Atlantic Coast market is so soft that fir, dimension lumber has dropped in price $13 a thousand in the past six months and hemlock is down more than $18 a thousand.

Some B.C. mills have been operating so close to cost that only by sale of chips to the pulp and paper industry have they been able to prevent operating at a loss.

The outlook for domestic sales is not good, according to Forest and Mill, and the main hope of keeping the mill wheels turning in B.C. this winter is from overseas sales.

Price of B.C. Power Pre-Election Gamble

The big pre-election gamble on the stock exchange is the stock of B.C. Power.

The CCF party has promised that if elected to power tomorrow it will take immediate steps to buy out B.C. Electric (subsidiary of B.C. Power) and merge it with the provincially owned B.C. Hydro.

Investors without a clue as to what might be termed a fair takeover price for B.C. Power common shares are looking askance at the stock, while existing shareholders are wondering if they should make a last minute get-out.

B.C. Power common stock has dropped from $34 1/2 to $32 1/2 in the past two weeks. If the CCF wins tomorrow it will certainly go lower, but if not, then it will probably regain its recent losses.

At the moment at least the political expert, rather than the financial adviser is the man to consult on this stock.

World Forestry Congress now taking place at Seattle.

Over 80 members of that congress are making a five-day tour, starting Monday, of B.C. forest activities. They start off from Victoria and during the next two days will visit a number of Vancouver Island operations.

Tuesday they visit the Crown Zellerbach pulp and paper mill at Elk Falls, and then see the reforestation job done by government and private enterprise in the Sayward forest area.

Wednesday brings a visit to the Alberni district where they will see the MacMillan, nining well below average.

Off-Cuff, On-Mike In Soup

QUEBEC (CP)—Prime Minister Diefenbaker, one of Canada's best-known students of the French language, tacitly admitted here he has problems with off-the-cuff talks in French.

He declined to speak in French while attending the opening of the fall session at the Quebec courthouse, recalling an embarrassing moment during an impromptu French talk.

"At the beginning of a little speech which I was trying to improvise in French, suddenly I got stuck."

"I turned to a friend and not realizing that I was in front of microphones, I asked him in English:

"How in the h... do you translate panorama in French?"

Mr. Diefenbaker did not say whether he has since learned that the word "panorama" is the same in French and English.

The Car Corner

Not Pretty But Unique—Like Seeing a Ghost

By J. T. JONES

It's almost like seeing a ghost, when you come upon a brand-new baby Renault in a dealer's lot. Frankly, I thought they'd stopped making them.

Not to be confused with the popular Dauphine model, the baby's official title is 750 de luxe. It's the car that was the backbone of Renault car production from 1946 until the Dauphine came along.

I can't think of any more distinctive-looking car—but on the other hand, I can't recall anybody ever calling it beautiful.

Perhaps the most interesting fact about baby Renaults is that they are used in large numbers by the Paris police. In a somewhat modified form, the gendarme special has a supercharged engine with a hot camshaft and an optional (for $430) five-speed gearbox. It is reputed to be capable of 100 miles an hour.

The picture this summons up, of a Gallic hero caning a bomb the size of this through the world-famed Parisian traffic, makes the mind reel.

This is all very well for heroes, but how would a simple Canadian family fare with the ordinary version? Well, that depends, of course, on what they enjoy in motoring.

I think the 750 de luxe's strongest feature is its ruggedness. I know a chap who drove one 140,000 miles, and had the engine rebuilt twice at a cost each time of roughly $100.

Of course, if cost was the only thing to think about there wouldn't be any Rolls-Royces. The occupants of a

Ferries Hurt, CPR Admits

By IAN STREET

Murdered?

Homicide detectives in Chicago are probing death in hospital of five-times married ex-model Mrs. Patricia Corcoran, 32, shortly after she was found unconscious in hotel. She was severely burned and bruised. (AP Photofax.)

The veteran CPR ferry Princess Elaine is to be withdrawn from service Sept. 25, the day on which the company's triangle run from here to Vancouver and Seattle ends for the summer season.

It's no secret that the new B.C. government ferries have hurt the competitive privately owned ferry services to the mainland.

NOT NEEDED

CPR officials acknowledged yesterday that it was because of the new ferries that the Princess Elaine was to be withdrawn from the Vancouver-Nanaimo run. A spokesman said: "With the new government service all our ships are not required during the slack season."

But the CPR denied reports that the Princess Elaine was to be refitted with a new and larger car deck and put into competition next summer with the Black Ball Transport ferry Co. running between Victoria and Port Angeles.

The company spokesman said no decision has been reached on the future role to be played by the Elaine from government.

The triangle service between Victoria, Vancouver and Seattle was in the fleet. The winter schedule to end about this time on the Vancouver-Nanaimo line when tourist travel starts run will be eight round trips to drop off. One or both of the daily ships on the run, Princess Patricia and Princess Margaret, likely will be diverted to the Nanaimo run.

Last winter, when the government ferries were building a new shipyard here and on the mainland, the Princess Elaine, which was retained on the Victoria-Vancouver leg of the triangle service, kept open the direct Vancouver report said the CPR coastal services, operating a change in traditional

B.C. Election Monday

Balmy Weather Could Mean Record Vote

a similar outcome on the provincial scene.

Monday's election is said by many to be one in which the CCF party cannot afford to lose ground if it is to remain a force on the Canadian political scene.

They see the B.C. election as the first test of the CCF labor merger which does not become official until next year but which, in the minds of many, is already a fact.

For the Social Credit party the election will be a test of the policy of going to the people without a firm election platform and, in its stead, a review of its eight years in office.

The outcome of the election will show B.C. Liberals and Conservatives to what degree they have recaptured public confidence since they were purged in 1952.

SOMMERS CASE
All parties opposing the government questioned the integrity and honesty of the Sommers case as a result of the handling of the former lands and forests minister was sentenced to five years for accepting bribes, but there was a feeling in some quarters that they were "flogging a dead horse."

All opposing parties similarly proposed new legislation covering alienation of natural resources and all agreed to put the skids under Swedish industrialist Axel Wenner-Gren's plan for hydro development on the Peace River.

TWO-PART REPLY

They were also unanimous on a demand to develop the Columbia River before the Peace and to this the government's two-part reply has been that the power of both will be needed by 1975 and that the Columbia is being pushed as fast as international negotiations will permit.

Principal planks of the CCF platform were public ownership of power and telephone utilities, state medicine, government acceptance of all school operating costs and half capital costs, repeal of the Trade Unions Act (Bill 43).

Liberals stand for removal of all school taxes from homes and farms, extension of the $50 homeowner grant to non-homeowners, public ownership of all new hydro developments and introduction of state medical care.

TAX RELIEF

The Conservatives pledged tax relief for the farmer, elimination of education tax upon property owners, equal rights for Indians, encouragement of home industries, stimulation of aggressive marketing techniques for B.C. products and termination of the policy of issuing tree farm licenses.

The Communist party which fielded 18 candidates, embraced most of the planks of the CCF platform (possibly at the expense of the CCF) and proposed to pay for them by somehow persuading the federal government to end arms spending.

LAST ELECTION

In the last election, September, 1956, Social Credit elected 35 members, CCF 10, Liberals two and Labor one. In between, Social Credit Mel Bryan of North Vancouver quit the government and joined the Liberals.

Standing at dissolution was Social Credit 38, CCF 10, Liberals two, Labor one and vacant one. Vacancy was caused by the death last spring of Oak Bay Liberal Archie Gibbs.

U.S. Attacks Hate Appeals

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The U.S. state department Saturday accused Communist countries of making malicious appeals to race prejudice and hate-mongering in Africa.

The department said members of the Communist bloc are engaged in a "deliberate and vicious campaign" to create "new tensions in the Congo and all of Africa" in order to bring chaos and ultimate Soviet domination of the continent.

Dawson Creek Boy Drowns

DAWSON CREEK (CP)—A youngster was drowned in the waters of the Dawson Creek here Saturday when he tumbled into the water while playing along the bank.

Police said the boy, Larry Brunin, probably struck his head as he fell into the stream.

IN ESQUIMALT

George WHITTAKER

A tireless worker on behalf of the district he knows so well, the people he knows so well! Put a Liberal Voice from Esquimalt in the Legislature on Sept. 12.

The greatest resource of British Columbia is its people. Liberals believe that human welfare must be placed first, and that all else follows. Liberals believe in a program with a heart. Liberals believe that there is no place for complacency as long as there are people in the Province with human problems which could best be solved by government action.

Remove All School Costs From Homes and Farms

Liberals believe that the cost of education should no longer be imposed on the municipal ratepayer and that it should be the responsibility of the Provincial Government. This can be done without an increase in provincial taxation and without removing the home owner's grant!

Protect the Consumer

A Liberal government would give special attention to the fight against fraud in all its forms... co-ordinate activities of volunteer bodies... and enact new consumer protection legislation if it is found to be necessary.

Union Security and Industrial Peace

The Liberal Party refuses to speak solely for either labor or management and adheres to the view that the public good is of paramount importance. It believes that the public good can best be served by recognizing the right of employees to organize and enjoy trade union security and accordingly rejects so-called "right to work" legislation. A Liberal government would strengthen the conciliation service to promote the settling of industrial disputes without stoppage of work; it would appoint a five-man Labor Relations Board to work for industrial peace on a FULL-TIME basis; it would set up an impartial Research Service to help industry, labor and the public to obtain objective information. It would grant full union security and bargaining rights to civil servants.

End Hocus-Pocus Financing

The Liberal pledge: honest accounting methods... no financial hocus-pocus to confuse and mislead the public. People have a right to all the facts.

Adjust Welfare Payments To Living Costs

We would review annually the amounts paid for social assistance and for mother's allowance. It is unfair to raise these payments only in an election year.

A Liberal government would dedicate itself to giving every British Columbian an opportunity to develop the very best of which he is capable, and would boast of material progress only after this had been achieved. Liberals believe that prosperity should be measured in terms of human welfare rather than in miles of blacktop. Based on these fundamental principles the Liberal Party offers its BLUEPRINT FOR PROGRESS.

Help for Chronically Ill

There have been enough broken promises. A Liberal government would extend B.C. H.I.S. to cover chronic illness, both to reduce human suffering and to relieve the demand for hospital accommodation required for acute care.

A Fair Deal for Municipalities

Liberals want a fair distribution of the tax burden. A Liberal government would convene a conference with the Union of B.C. Municipalities in order to study their proposals and to bring relief to municipal taxpayers.

Equal Justice for All

Liberals believe that every man, rich or poor, has a right to be adequately defended in court. We would establish a system of PUBLIC DEFENDERS to protect the individual. Liberals advocate a wide range of basic reforms to keep our judicial system an effective weapon against the wielding of arbitrary power against the citizen. WE WOULD GRANT EVERY CITIZEN THE RIGHT TO SUE THE CROWN FOR WRONGS DONE BY THE GOVERNMENT WITHOUT REQUIRING THE PERMISSION OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL, as is now the case.

Low Cost Public Power

The Liberal Party sharply disagrees with the CCF, does not believe that public ownership offers any sure guarantee of low cost power and would be reluctant to snatch the fruits of success from those who have risked their capital to bring electrification to a pioneer province at a time when no one else would do it; such a course could not help but stifle future industrial development. But the Liberal Party firmly believes that the time has come when all future development of on-site hydro power should be undertaken by the B.C. Power Commission, and that rates charged and service offered by private utility companies should be more fully investigated and controlled by a strengthened Public Utilities Commission.

Medical Insurance

A Liberal Government would introduce a plan of medical service insurance to protect all from financial disaster caused by heavy medical bills. The plan would guarantee free choice of doctor and independence of the medical profession.

Look at the Liberal Record in Opposition!

The task of a party in opposition is not easy — but it is clearly defined.

It should oppose what it thinks is wrong, support what it thinks is right, and make suggestions where it appears to it that there is room for improvement.

These are the principles which have guided the Liberals in the House since 1952. Here is but a part of the record:

Home-Owner Grant

The Liberals introduced the home-owner grant, but urged that its benefits be extended to include those who cannot afford to own their own homes.

Justice for Civil Servants

The Liberals introduced legislation to give full bargaining rights to Civil Servants and other Crown employees.

Municipal Aid

The Liberals have criticized the Government for using the Equalization of Assessment Act to shift 30 per cent of the cost of education to municipal taxpayers and urged that the Government's 50 per cent average sharing of cost should be made a minimum, and the average raised to 80 per cent.

Equal Justice for All

The Liberals introduced legislation to provide for Public Defenders, to ensure that every person accused of crime would be adequately defended in court.

Reduction of Provincial Debt

The Liberal Party supported the Government's promise to reduce the Provincial debt by $200 million in five years, adding over $200 million in contingent liabilities for every dollar taken off direct debt.

Union Security

In 1959 and again in 1960 the Liberals introduced legislation to restore to trade-unions the right of freedom of speech taken from them by Bill 43.

U.S. Wins Basketball Medal But Russia Piles Up Points

ROME (AP) — The United States won its fifth straight Olympic basketball championship Saturday night, but the over-all athletic might of the Soviet Union recorded a staggering 807½ points at the 17th Olympic Games drew to a close.

Even a dazzling 25-point performance by all-American basketball player Jerry Lucas of Ohio state could not dim the Olympic team effort of the Soviet who crashed over the 800 mark with a second place in basketball, fourth and fifth in the marathon and a night capping gold medal in the heavyweight division of weight lifting.

The United States had 559½ points at the basketball gold medal and a 23 finish in the weight lifting by heavyweights Jim Bradford of Washington, D.C., and Norbert Schomanski of Des Moines, Mich., Russia's smash the world record of America's Paul Anderson, the 1956 Olympic champion. Anderson's world mark was 1,129½. He lifted 1,102 to win the Olympic title at Melbourne.

Vladimir Maslennikov, first with a total of 1,184½ pounds to

Sixth was Canada's David Battle with 992.

The gold medal count, with only the two-part equestrian jumping competition today left on the Olympic program, was Russia 43, the United States 34.

At Melbourne in 1956, Russia scored 722 points for 393 for the U.S. and won 37 gold medals to 32 by the Americans.

Bikila Abebe, a bare-footed Ethiopian palace guard, won the marathon early Saturday evening.

Lucas paced a U.S. team that won eight straight games here and continued a record of U.S. domination that has produced a

JACKIE PARKER

Parker Just Great In Eskimo Victory Over Stampeder

EDMONTON — Jackie Parker turned in what was perhaps the greatest single performance of his brilliant career here last night to lead Edmonton Eskimos to a crushing 41-10 victory over Calgary Stampeder in the Western Interprovincial Football Union.

The spindly-legged quarterback may have played a more dramatic part in games over the past six seasons when the results were more important, but it is doubtful if he has ever been in better form than he was last night in bewildering the Stampeder. Parker played almost the entire game at quarterback, passed for one touchdown, scored another and kicked two field goals, a single point and a three-point conversion for 16 points and a league-leading 65 for the season. But it was in the passing department that he wowed a crowd of 18,000 at Clarke Stadium.

Parker completed a fantastic 16 of 17 passes for 280 yards. He completed two early in the first quarter, missed on one, and tossed 14 in a row before giving way to Rolfe Miles at quarterback late in the fourth quarter.

PROVES IT

Eskimo fans have long claimed that Parker can do anything with a football, and he proved it last night. In addition to his 16 points, he burst for 25 yards and another touchdown that was called back, blocked in the key spots to shake Miles loose for two long gains, and time and again broke loose for good yardage when he appeared hopelessly trapped in his own backfield.

His play at quarterback set up the other Edmonton touchdowns, two by Johnny Bright, one by Jim Letavich, and one by Normie Kwong. Lovell Coleman got Calgary's touchdown with the game just two minutes old on a 38-yard run, the only time Calgary led. Doug Brown kicked the convert and a field goal in the first quarter, which ended 13-10.

KEY INTERCEPTIONS

Calgary appeared headed for better things than it finally got during the first half, but two interceptions led to Edmonton touchdowns. The Stampeder started the second half with a march from their own 37-yard line to the Edmonton 16, but Bill Smith intercepted a Joe Kapp pass in the end zone. Edmonton took over on their 10-yard line, and Parker promptly skittered 18 yards to get them rolling again, and that was all for Calgary.

It was a costly defeat for Stampers in their bid to overtake B.C. Lions for the third playoff spot in the WIFU. They now trail the Lions by three points, and even a victory Monday night against the Lions in Vancouver would leave them one point back.

Eskimos, on the other hand, moved within four points of the undefeated Winnipeg Blue Bombers, who have handed them their only two defeats this season.

DENVER WIN — The Denver Bears won their first American Association pennant Saturday night by defeating St. Paul 7-3 to protect their two-game lead with only one contest left on the schedule.

Practices are scheduled Monday and Wednesday at 6 p.m. at Toilett through the heat for two hours at Royal Roads last night in an effort to clinch berth on the city all-star slide, and team captain Peter Clarke was satisfied with the result.

The trial match ended in an 8-3 victory for the Reds over the Blues, but the score wasn't very important. Main object was to pick players to go against the touring Japanese all-stars Sept. 21.

"The boys weren't too bad at all," Clarke said. "It was awfully hot, which made it good for conditioning."

Whitby Replacements Shine As Minto Cup All Square

NEW WESTMINSTER, B.C. (CP) — Paced by four playoff recruits, Whitby Red Wings came from behind to trounce New Westminster Salmonbellies 15-9 in a rugged lacrosse game here Saturday night before 1,100 fans.

The result tied the best-of-seven Canadian junior lacrosse championships for the Minto Cup at 1-1 with the third game here next Tuesday.

Wally Thorne from Brampton, Johnny Roberts from Fergus, Pete Berge from St. Catharines and Jim Vilneff from Peterborough each took a hand in the scoring and as a unit were in on 10 of Whitby's 15 goals.

Thorne scored three, Berge and Roberts two each, Vilneff one.

Bryan Gibson scored three for the second straight game for Whitby, with Terry Davis adding two, Glen Lotton and captain Charlie Grandy one each.

For Salmonbellies, captain Mike Gates was almost the entire offense with three goals and three assists, Doug Wal-smith added two, his 26th and 27th in seven playoff games; Dave Tovy, defencemen Gordon Stidolph and Terry Brownless one each.

Seventy-seven minutes in penalties were handed out in the game which several times threatened to break into a donnybrook. Whitby took 44 lead. But in the second, minutes, including a 10-minute misconduct to spare netminder Denton Rendall for talking and a major to Berge for a last-second fight with Stidolph.

The finalists in the women's division also were decided when Darlene Hard of Montello, Calif., seeded fourth, turned back Donna Floyd, 19-year-old William and Mary College junior, 6-1, 7-5, and defending champion Maria Bueno of Brazil, eliminated Christine Truman, the tall British Davis Cupper, 6-3, 9-7.

Buchholz defeat meant that for the fourth time in five years, the final will be all-Australian. Not since Tony Trabert won the title in 1955 has a native-born American been in the final. Last year, Alex Olmedo, who was born in Peru, lost to Fraser in the final.

Fraser, seeded No. 1, shattered the dreams of 18-year-old Denny Ralston of Bakersfield, Calif., 11-9, 6-3, 6-2. Laver triumphed 4-6, 7-6, 6-4, 7-5 over Earl (Butch) Buchholz, of St. Louis, Mo., to set up an all-Australian final.

For Fraser, it was experience over youth, and once past the

with Alec Merriman

Why is it that as soon as Labor Day passes practically all outdoor, camping and picnicking activities come to a sudden halt, when September and the early part of October bring some of the nicest and most refreshing weather of the year?

Yesterday was one of the finest days of the year and yet Sandy Beach at Bamberton was almost deserted. There were three cars in the beach parking lot and three tenters in the campsite area. Only a handful of picnickers and campers were in Goldstream Park.

In late April and May people flocked by the hundreds to the outdoors, to picnic, and even to camp, but in the fall it seems they can hardly wait for winter to arrive.

Try a picnic on one of the beaches, or at one of the provincial campsites or picnic areas, today and you will open up a whole new venue of fall fun and be well on the way to extending your outdoor fun season.

Yesterday we arose at the crack of dawn to try the buck failing for goby at Bamberton. And except for a handful of grills we didn't see a fish netted in any boat all morning. Some of the best bucktail fishing we have ever had was several years ago off Bamberton, but it would appear a little early this year yet, although there have been some reports of success in this area.

There is now a first class concrete boat launching ramp on the Malahat Indian reserve, adjacent to the Mill Bay ferry dock. It appears a progressive and commendable step on the part of the Indians, who charge $1 per launching. It is a happy solution to the problem of public use of choice Indian land and it is too bad more Indians don't turn their lands to profit-making ventures and save white people the embarrassment of trespassing on Indian land.

One place where the Indians could make a mint of money would be at Brentwood if they were to build a launching ramp there.

There is also a concrete launching ramp at Mill Bay Resort.

Duncan game warden Bill Fowkes has a problem... He is allergic to fish!

Every time he eats fish, except for canned salmon, his eyes puff out and his neck and ears swell. But, anglers who would break the law, take note... He can handle fresh fish with no ill effects.

Fowkes and game warden Jack Lenfesty, along with fish biologist David Hurn formed a pitch fork brigade at Langford Lake on Friday. They scooped up dead fish by the hundreds, punctured them with the forks, and threw them out in the lake to sink.

Lakeshore residents had complained about the smell of the decaying fish which resulted from the poisoning of the lake as first step in a fish rehabilitation program.

Hurn doesn't expect the lake to be ready for restocking before late 1962, but he did say his department is studying means to reduce the toxic hangover effect of the toxaphene by use of an additive or antidote. Lime and activated carbon has been used elsewhere on the continent with some success. It is possible a test lake will be used in B.C., maybe Langford.

Hurn said the millions of larvae which floated along the shores of Langford after the poisoning were of the two-winged aquatic flies, midges, which came to the surface to get air. In the toxaphene there was a strong emulsifier which broke the surface tension which attends them, and they couldn't sink again.

South Vancouver Island Rangers will stage their annual pre-deer target shoot today.

Running deer targets, which have proved popular in previous years, will be used for the rifle portion of the program. Also included in the ham-and-bacon shoot will be events for shotgunners.

All shooters are invited to attend the shoot at the Rangers' grounds of Happy Valley Road.

Shooting is scheduled from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Birds Buried on Base Paths

Baltimore's young Orioles sagged a little under pennant pressure yesterday and New York Yankees climbed over them back into first place in the American League.

While the Yankee veterans were whipping Detroit Tigers, 5-1, the Orioles were losing, 3-2, to Chicago White Sox, thanks in part to an 11th-inning blunder that may have cost them the game. Certainly it left the top of the 11th inning.

Yankees in a fairly rosy position. With bases loaded and one inning to tie the score for five double plays won his 15th out, Al Pinder tried to light Chicago field-whose Al Smith made a fine running catch and threw from big Bob Turley and perfectly to the plate while off balance and still moving. Instead of tagging out at third after the catch, Gus Triandos, seventh of the year, and Mickey Mantle hit his 33rd home run, which moved with two men on in the seventh inning.

Pittsburgh Pirates moved closer to the National League pennant with a 4-1 triumph over Chicago Cubs that reduced their "magic number" to 13. Rob Friend, supported by

Russia to Tighten Army Discipline, Party Control

By K. C. THALER

LONDON (UPI)—Moscow yesterday announced a new code for the Red Army designed to tighten discipline, stamp out hooliganism and strengthen the Communist Party's control over the military.

The announcement by Marshal Andrei A. Grechko, commander-in-chief of the Russian ground forces and first deputy defence minister, was disclosed by the Tass News Agency.

Grechko, one of Premier Khrushchev's closest associates, recently succeeded Marshal I. S. Koniev as supreme commander of the Warsaw Pact forces.

Grechko said the new rules "mark a new phase in the life of the Soviet armed forces. Russian experts said it was a furtherance of the policy begun when Khrushchev fired Marshal Georgi Zhukov, the once powerful leader of the armed forces.

Behind the move is the systematic reorganization of the ideological and political control of the Red Army. Khukov had resisted party control which reached its height during the Second World War when Premier Stalin stationed commissars through the armed forces to keep a constant rein on political belief.

The first official indication of Communist Party uneasiness over the army's ideological views came a year ago when Lt. Gen. A. Dubovskoy, political chief of the Moscow military district, was removed and replaced by Lt. Gen. D. Yegorov, political head of the Red Army in Hungary.

Dubovskoy's downfall followed attacks against him in the Soviet press last fall for hooliganism in the armed forces. He also was accused of allowing shortcomings in the political work of the armed forces in his district—the graver charge of the two.

Since then there have been frequent references in the Russian press to hooliganism, absenteeism and loose living among troops.

ON YOUR WAY
You may never intend to be a collector—somehow the word sounds so expensive! Nevertheless, one day you admire an old, tiny bud vase in an antique shop and something impels you to ask the price. Why? It's cheap! And then, inevitably, you find the mate. And you're on your way.

Of course people collect pictures. But some folk collect frames! A collector will spend years collecting one-of-a-kind frames and then invest comparatively little time choosing pictures to complete the project! Our mothers' and grandmothers collected porcelain figures—often indiscriminately. Today a collector of porcelain would probably concentrate on one type of figure—possibly the human figure or birds. And, instead of dotting the figures about the room on tables, they would likely be displayed on wall brackets.

And that is the secret of collecting: group your possessions in one place.

LARGE WALL
If you collect pictures, group them on one large wall. Hang as many as you like—and as close as you like—but arrange them so they are the focal point of the room. And before you hang them on the wall, arrange them on the floor in precisely the same area as you will have on the wall. They should be hung so that there are straight lines at the side and bottom.

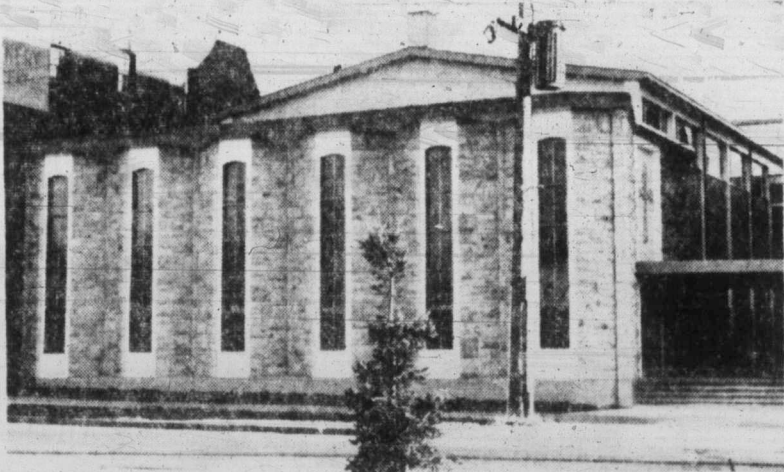

IN CABINETS
Small articles, such as antique spoons, knives or coins, may be displayed in glass-covered cabinets. Open shelves and what-nots are excellent to display miniatures.

A bookcase is useful. Inter-spense your books with anything large enough to be easily identified: figures, pottery, glassware, ornaments.

ONE TYPE
If collecting pictures appeals to you, you will find it more challenging if you confine yourself to one type of picture. It might be of horses or sailing ships. Collect botanical prints if you are a garden enthusiast. Or collect a single historical period.

But I warn you. Once you start, you'll never stop. Collecting is a disease for which there is no known cure!

Metropolitan Addition Opens Today

Building will house, in most up-to-date facilities, all church education work up to junior age level, and contain Ephraim Evans Auditorium for Sunday School and mid-week activities. Opening ceremony will take place at 3 p.m.—(Colonist photo.)

Secret of Collecting: Collect with Purpose

By BETTIE BRADLEY

There is an old adage that objects don't collect people. And I think it is true. So many people will proudly exhibit a collection they have spent years assembling and then say, almost wonderingly, "I'm not sure how it all started."

However it starts, it is a rewarding pastime.

'Assassin,' Crowd Yells Was Parrot Plucked?

NICE, France (AP)—A crowd gathered in front of the store window shouting "assassin," Police were called in to clear up the trouble.

In the window were two parrots. One sported rich plumage like a peacock. The second was unadorned by a single feather.

The parrots demonstrated the before-and-after condition of ladies who shopped there.

let's REMODEL with Western Red Cedar siding

Give your home the "Cinderella Touch"

Let's say you have a good, older-style home, (like the one pictured upper left), in a pleasant, well established neighborhood — and you're thinking of moving because you're tired of the old style and you need more space. Hold on. Think about remodeling before you move. Wonderful changes can be wrought as the photos in this advertisement show. It may be easier than you think and reasonable in cost, too. Ask your neighborhood lumber dealer for the free brochure on remodeling with Western Red Cedar siding. It will give you new ideas about your old house which could mean money in your pocket.

Soviet Red Tape And Dawdling Hamper Visitors

MOSCOW (AP)—The first thing that strikes a Western visitor to this country is the tremendous amount of red tape—and just plain slowness—that hampers everyday living.

You walk into a Moscow restaurant and march to an empty table. It is decked out with everything imaginable: plates, silverware, napkins and several kinds of glasses—as if for a banquet. Over in one corner is a gathering of waitresses.

You notice a single waitress is scurrying about. You signal her. She may or may not bring a menu.

If she does, it will be five or 10 minutes before she returns to take your order. You agree on something and she heads for the kitchen. Perhaps she comes back in 15 minutes with the food. Or much later. Getting the bill is still another operation.

You have eaten. Now what about your car? Its tank is almost empty. You head for a gas station. The female attendant reluctantly approaches you. She demands to see your gasoline coupons, which are the only thing that will get gas for you, or for a Soviet citizen.

You produce coupons for "A93" gasoline, the highest octane gasoline available to an ordinary citizen.

The attendant takes one look at the coupons and says, "Nyet."

It seems she has only "A70" gas, fairly low grade stuff.

She suggests you go to the tourist office in the hotel next door and buy cheaper coupons.

The girl in the tourist office produces the coupons—after you have been waiting 30 minutes for her to return from lunch. She sends you to the cashier's office down the hall. The cashier refuses to accept traveller's cheques and tells you to go upstairs to the office of the government bank.

The girl at the bank counter accepts the cheques, but only after she fills out a blank on your currency exchange form, which you must carry at all times.

Then you go back to the cashier's office, pay your money and hand her a form which you got from the coupon girl.

You return to the coupon girl with one of the forms and you get your coupons.

Victorians Fly to Hawaiian Vacation

Looking over an airline timetable with Canadian Pacific Airline's stewardess Denese Gordon are Clair E. Andrews and his mother, Mrs. W. Andrews, Jr., 2324 Trent Street, Victoria, who are now basking in sunshine at Waikiki Beach, Hawaii, Clair won round-trip tickets for Honolulu vacation during recent Jaycee-sponsored Tourist Week campaign.

Dirty Weather

PARIS (CP)—With unaccustomed brevity, the Communist newspaper L'Humanite put it in four words:

"Dirty weather—costly life."

For hundreds of thousands of tourists, that summed up the summer season in Europe. In contrast to last year's golden glow, the peak travel months of July and August were marked by rain, shafts of sunlight and then more rain.

The French weatherman warned vacationists it was a time for parasols and parapluies (umbrellas)—but not one without the other.

CAMPERS SUFFER

On the famed "Quintze Out," the top holiday weekend based on the Aug. 15 religious celebration marked in some communities by torchlight processions, the rain started Friday night and continued practically without letup until Monday noon. Hardest hit were the ubiquitous campers, whose only defence against the elements were thoroughly drenched tents, save for the fortunate who had a trailer caravan.

CHEAP HOLIDAY

In the post-war years, "le camping" has become the fastest-growing method of ensuring a cheap holiday.

To a Canadian visitor, it seems that the French take their annual break with great seriousness. Holidays tend to be concentrated in July and August.

COSTS VARY

As for L'Humanite's crack about the cost of living, that can be taken two ways. If you happen to be in Paris Aug. 1, you would have to pay a supplement on your subway fare, well-known restaurant near the St. Lazare station, all for a little more than $4.

At the seaside resort of Rotheneuf in Brittany, one hotel offered oysters from the famed port of Cancale, mussels, sole, veal cutlet, fried potatoes, a variety of cheeses plus ice cream or fruits, all for the equivalent of $1.50.

For the dollar-toting tourists, an important consideration is Canadian dollar. But you can that most Paris stores offer a still get a five-course meal 20-per-cent discount on goods with apertif, red wine, white purchased with travellers' wine and champagne at a cheques.

Striking Union Ready to Talk

TORONTO (CP)—The United Steelworkers of America has offered to resume direct bargaining or to join the Dominion Bridge Co. in a request for government help to end a 26-day strike at the company's plants.

Striking plants are located in Toronto, Calgary, Regina, Amherst, N.S., Edmonton, Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Ottawa, Winnipeg, and two at Montreal.

Big Problem: Get Women Out on Washday

Seething Crowd Ready to Mob Wild-Driving Teen-Age Pair

By JACK FRY

An angry mob almost took the law into its own hands when two teenagers were arrested yesterday after a stolen car nearly ran down two children playing on Uganda Avenue by Gorge Park.

"If I had a gun I'd kill you," shouted an unidentified man to a 17-year-old driver as police were handcuffing him and his 16-year-old companion. "You know you almost killed two children?"

OUT OF CONTROL

Police said the stolen, black 1949 Ford careened out of control for the last five blocks of the chase, going from one side of the road to the other and striking the curb "a good dozen times" and that several times it cut in front of the police car trying to pass it.

Two youths were captured at 5:30 p.m. on Gosper Crescent where their car was hemmed in on one side by the police car and on the other by a private car driven by a naval petty officer.

A crowd quickly formed around the group and the man who threatened to kill the driver ran up from the direction of Uganda, said an eyewitness, 14-year-old Gail Marshall of 1040 Tillicum.

GRABBED DRIVER

The navy man grabbed the driver by the neck of his jacket and slapped him across the face, then he shook him," said Miss Marshall.

"They sure had some angry people in that crowd," said Const. Bob Peterson of the Saanich police force.

On nearby Uganda, 14-year-old Bobby Panton, 1037 Tillicum, who was playing with about 10 other children in the middle of the block, said that three-year-old Dale Robertson, 305 Uganda, and four-year-old Laurel Duncan, of the same address, were in the boulevard when the car struck the curb in front of them.

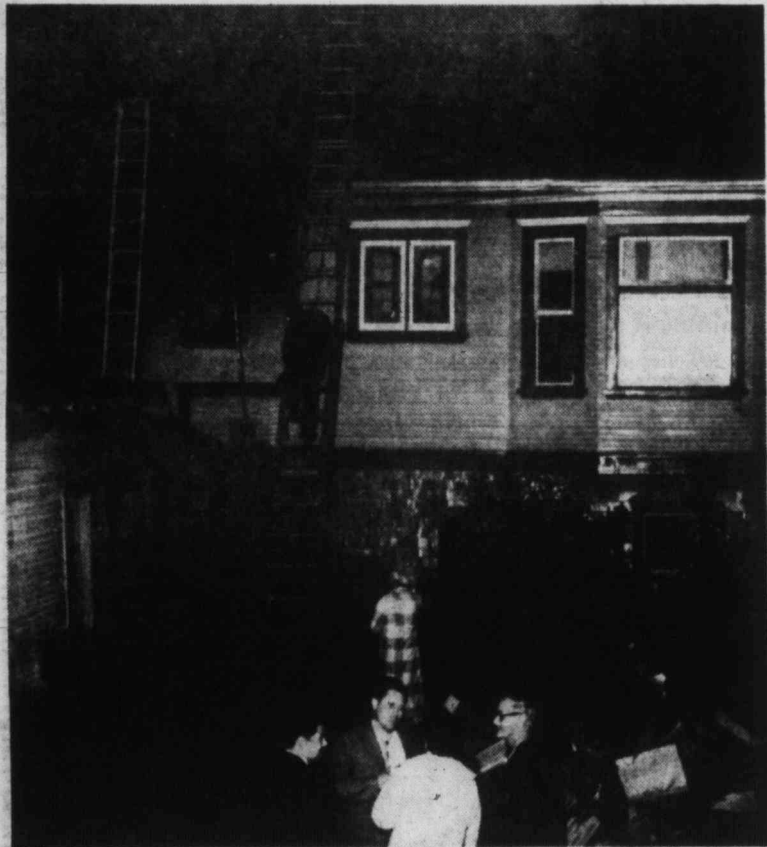

Neither the little boy nor the freckle-faced, red-haired girl seemed to realize how close they had come to death.

STOLEN CAR REPORT

Const. Peterson, who was alone in the police car, said: "I had to keep that siren going to warn people to get out of the way."

He said it started from a stolen car report broadcast by city police. A navy shore patrol vehicle sighted the car on Craigflower, but lost it in traffic, and a navy chief in his own car gave chase when the stolen car doubled back on Craigflower.

Const. Peterson, closing in from Tillicum, met the two cars head-on, made a U-turn, and gave chase. The navy man, unable to follow a quick right turn onto Selkirk from Tillicum, was waiting by Gosper Crescent when the stolen car and police car roared along Uganda. McNaughton and back onto Tillicum toward Gosper Crescent.

Children, Matches Suspect In House Blaze on Burnside

Children playing with matches apparently were the cause of a fire last night which jumped from an abandoned shed to a two-storey, older home at 320 Burnside East.

Estimate of damage was not immediately known.

A glow in the sky from leaping flames attracted hundreds of spectators from nearby Douglas, Cloverdale and Gorge areas.

Fire trucks from both the city and Saanich responded to calls which came in from a street corner box and by telephone.

Tenants Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Ramage were eating their supper and their three children, Rosalind, 9, Steven, 5, and Ian, 7, were outside playing.

"Ian ran in and shouted 'the shed is on fire,'" said Mrs. Ramage. "I dialed the operator to call the fire department."

Fire which started in a corner of an oil-soaked, wooden shed formerly used as a machine shop, at the front of the property, quickly engulfed one corner of the home, which was about eight feet away.

"We've told the kids from around here to stop playing in the shed but they don't listen," said Mrs. Ramage. "Ian was playing with some other children. He was in there (the shed) but he didn't do it."

A neighbor said that shortly before the fire broke out he saw three young children using matches to set alight grass on the boulevard outside his home. He said he warned the children not to play with matches.

Mrs. Martha Crowe, 3161 Millgrove, who jointly owns the property with her brother, Victor Green of San Pedro Avenue, was on the scene while firemen were still battling the blaze. She said she did not know the value of the property.

Modern Cancer Clinic In New Jubilee Wing

The new wing of Royal Jubilee Hospital is to have one of the most modern cancer clinics in Canada. Hospital administrator George Masters said yesterday it would allow expanded operation of the present clinic, which has facilities for treatment of more than 8,000 cancer patients annually. Construction will start within five months.

Election Combat Over

By TERRY HAMMOND

British Columbia's least-colorful postwar election campaign shuddered to a far-from reluctant halt last night with party officials in hand-to-hand combat with their most tangible problem—to date—how to get out the women's vote on washday.

Affairs of state were suddenly subordinated to the scheduling of free transportation for the party faithful. Men accustomed to dealing in the political future suddenly found themselves confronted with the domestic present.

MRS. AVERAGE HOUSEWIFE

The question of whether the Columbia should come first was forced to take a back seat to the question of whether Mrs. Average Housewife should come first.

Everybody agreed that she should, but her problems were manifold.

The morning would be taken up with the washing and after lunch there would be the ironing and sometime between 3 and 4 o'clock the children would be coming home from school, hungry, and supper was at five or six.

Could she get a free ride to the polls, do a little shopping (there's ALWAYS time for shopping) and still get a free ride home?

Well, yes, she could.

AIDED AND ABETTED

The enthusiasm and ingenuity which invariably goes into this typical election transportation complex seems never to be diminished by the probability that for every supporter carried to the polls in the chosen chariots at least three supporters of opposing parties are similarly aided and abetted.

Party headquarters officials sat in knots jostling down, first, the names of their relatives with cars, the names of near-relatives with cars, friends with cars, acquaintances of friends with cars. Still, towards 7 p.m. on Monday, there won't be nearly enough cars.

Party workers, (distinguished from party officials by the fact that they actually work) were preparing statistic sheets.

ANY GIVEN TIME

Statistic sheets are designed to show at any given time on Monday who in the constituency has voted and who has not. Known supporters are usually ticked with a colored pencil to make sure they get to the poll at any rate.

Statistic sheets being what they are (fairly reliable until noon, fairly unreliable until five, truly unreliable until seven and a thorough mess before eight) many known supporters will be telephoned seven times by at least four different people to make sure they have cast their ballots. Scrutineers were getting last-minute briefing and not quite understanding them.

Relays of runners were being signed on to get polling station information back to headquarters in the full realization that no matter how fast they run someone will have phoned it there before them.

HAM AND EGG

Wives of party workers (and even some wives of party officials) were deciding what to put into the ham and devilled egg sandwiches which invariably find their way into party headquarters on election nights.

And of course, there would be coffee, gallons of it. Not very good coffee (the cream will run out about 9:30) but hot, lip-blistering hot, in thick mugs.

Tomorrow the rough-hewn planks of the 1960 election will be forgotten and the talk around headquarters will not be so much what you stand for but whom you know.

"How about this guy?" somebody will ask pointing to a name on the voters' list, "anyone know him?"

SPEED TO HIS HOME

Four limousines will speed to his home only to find he voted on his way to work.

By 11 p.m. the wishes of the electorate will be known in most ridings, many old problems will be resolved and some new ones will be created.

And among the new ones will be what to do with several dozen devilled egg sandwiches, only slightly curled around the edges.

Election Notebook

Cliche-Filled Bathtub Brims with Promise

RECEIVED AND FILED: Out Metchosin way, alongside one of those community groups of rural letter boxes, stands a big, white bathtub. Residents found a useful purpose for it.

As each new batch of election propaganda was delivered to the letter boxes/so each recipient neatly stacked it in the bathtub. The tub is now full.

BIG SCENE: Traffic jam almost snarled up Yates Street last night as hordes of Liberals gathered outside their campaign headquarters prior to a blitz on city homes to urge all people out to vote.

George Gregory kept up a running count. "Here comes number 248, and here's 249 and now we're dispatching number 250..." as more and more canvassers gathered.

Some were said to have covered up to 100 houses apiece.

Later most of the canvassers

Number of candles on the cake: one.

ROYAL MAIL: Oak Bay Social Credit campaign manager A. C. McFadyen went through his group's mailing list yesterday and found that Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth has been sent a complete set of election campaign pamphlets.

"They were sent out inadvertently by our secretary," said Mr. McFadyen.

FIRE FIGHTERS: Two Liberal canvassers out on the Grits' Blitz last night had a field day among the large crowd which gathered to watch a fire on Burnside.

As the flames roared, the canvassers rushed around pressing pamphlets into the hands of all present.

NO HOFFA SHE: Victoria CCF candidate Mrs. Rhoda Erickson said last night she had received an awful lot of telephone calls accusing her of being a labor boss.

"I'd just like to say I've never been in any smoke-filled rooms. I don't smoke cigars. I don't chew snuff and I don't try to frighten people with boogies behind every dark corner," said Mrs. Erickson. "And that comes from all five-foot-one of me."

PREMATURE: The afternoon newspaper matter-of-factly "did away" with Walter Campbell—husband of CCF candidate Mrs. May Campbell yesterday.

As the same newspaper is fond of saying: "The 'late' reference came too early. Another death highly exaggerated."

"They've been vainly trying to kill us off throughout the campaign," said Mrs. Campbell. "Walter was out fishing yesterday... he's very much alive and will be for many years to come."

RENTALS UNLIMITED: Clifford A. Scotton, assistant director of public relations for the Canadian Labor Congress, is on loan to the B.C. Federation of Labor for the election campaign.

He told a CCF rally here this week that he's been home to Ottawa for two days in the past 11 weeks, and cracked:

"I'm a disposable object, to be loaned out where ever I'm needed, but my wife thinks I'm a disposable object."

BOOSTER SHOT: Esquimalt Conservative candidate James Bryant took heart yesterday from a report about the B.C. election in the Toronto Daily Star.

Not unnaturally, The Star predicted Mr. Bryant would win his seat.

SIGN LANGUAGE: All the campaign posters will have to be removed during the next week or so, including these spotted yesterday.

Opposite the home of Soered candidate J. Donald Smith on Fairfield pictures of Works Minister W. N. Chant, Waldo Skillings and himself are tacked onto a tree trunk—right underneath a huge "For Sale" sign.

Every little assistance helps the cause, according to the CCF point of view. On Robertson Street a house has "Vote CCF" posters plastered on the front windows.

CARRIED AWAY: One of the silliest charges leveled against the government was that thrown by Victoria Liberal campaign manager David Hummel last night.

He said the Soereds did not believe in democracy as "they have effectively disenfranchised between 10 and 40 per cent of the Victoria City electorate by not ensuring that the voters' lists were reasonably up to date before calling a long-planned but short-notice election."

Truth of the matter—as that extensive enumerating was conducted at the beginning of the year, and those missed had ample opportunity to get their names on the roll. Some were undoubtedly missed but the situation today is a thousand times better than the shambles which occurred in 1956.

SIGNIFICANT POINTER: Victoria Social Credit candidate J. Donald Smith celebrates his birthday Monday.

"If the votes come in as the birthday cards have been coming in I don't think I will have any trouble," he said yesterday.

Pensioners Losing Out

Premier Bennett's government is making political pawns out of pensioners in claiming that British Columbia has the finest welfare schemes, city Liberal candidate Ald. Geoffrey Edgelow charged last night.

"For the past two years the provincial government has been quietly taking medical cards from pensioners who are disqualified from receiving the provincial bonus or part of it," he said.

NEGLECTED

"And while Social Credit did raise the provincial bonus amount, they neglected to raise the minimum amount of income that a pensioner can have."

"This way the government saves money—many people find they are not permitted to receive the maximum bonus after all."

Petition Asking Sewers

Saanich public works committee Tuesday night will consider a petition from some 200 persons living in the Tillicum-Whiteside area, asking for a new sewer bylaw.

Residents of the district last year rejected a $100,000 bylaw which proposed a self-contained sewer scheme.

MORE STUDY

In the petition which will be discussed Tuesday night the 200 residents ask Saanich to make a further study of the project to see if costs can be reduced and a new bylaw put to voters in December.

Last year's plan would have cost residents an average of $80.81 a year over 20 years, over and above connection and installation fees of about $225 for each lot.

Married RC Priest Takes Up Duties

COPENHAGEN (Reuters)—Scandinavia's only married Catholic priest started his duties this summer as a curate of a suburban parish three miles north of Copenhagen.

And 53-year-old, bespectacled Father Olaf Roerdam Bonnevie already is a popular figure among his 500 parishioners at the little white-walled Church of St. Therese.

Descendant of a long line of Lutheran pastors, he has exchanged the black cassock and pleated white collar of the Lutheran Church for the vestments of a Roman Catholic priest.

Father Bonnevie is the first married Catholic priest in Denmark since 1248, when celibacy was imposed throughout Scandinavia.

There are a few existing cases of this kind. In Germany, there are five, all former Lutherans. Father Bonnevie was given his dispensation in 1953 by the late Pope Pius XII and since has followed the Lutheran pastors, he has exchanged the black cassock and pleated white collar of the Lutheran Church for the vestments of a Roman Catholic priest.

Telephone Pioneer Alfred E. Lee Dies

Pioneer Canadian electrician and telephone technician Alfred E. Lee, 90, a Victoria resident for 12 years, died Friday.

Before coming to Canada in 1895, he supervised installation of the first electrical plants in many sections of England.

After arriving in Canada he was credited with extending and establishing the Edmonton telephone system while being employed by the first light and telephone company.

In 1897 he left Edmonton for Dawson and was the only one of his party to survive and reach the site of the gold rush.

In 1900 Mr. Lee constructed the first telephone system in the mining community and was in charge of the Dawson Telephone, Heat, Light and Power Co. until 1928, when he moved to Vancouver.

As an employee of the Canadian General Electric Co. he supervised installation of electrical apparatus in many Vancouver and B.C. stores and plants.

Mr. Lee retired in 1948 as electrical superintendent of the Dominion Bridge Co.

Surviving is a son, Alan Lee; two daughters, Mrs. Phyllis MacDougall and Mrs. Harry Gilliland; nine grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

Funeral arrangements will be announced.

George Allen

George Pelthieridge Allen, 84, a resident of Victoria for the past 24 years, died recently after a long illness.

Born in Biddlington, Yorkshire, England, in 1876, Mr. Allen came to Canada in 1912. He lived for many years on James Island, where he was employed as chief chemist with Canadian Industries Ltd.

In 1936 he retired to Victoria, where he lived at 1714 Montclair.

He is survived by one sister, Mrs. Dorothea Rogers, Victoria, and several nieces and nephews.

Talks Close In Harmony

SEATTLE (AP)—The fifth World Forestry Congress closed Saturday on a note of international co-operation.

The head of the Russian delegation, Anatole Borisovich Zhukov, spoke of the need for "teamwork" in the world.

"It is not always possible to see our own mistakes," he said. "The more we share our experience and acumen, the more we reduce our mistakes." Ervin L. Peterson, assistant U.S. secretary of agriculture, told the 2,000 foresters from 71 nations such conferences "laid not only the basis for the forestry of the future, but also the basis for understanding among people."

Thirsty Voters Ready For Dry Election Day

Victorians won't die of thirst this weekend. Officials at city liquor stores said last night there had been a big run on supplies as a result of the statute forcing closure of all liquor outlets on provincial election day Monday.

Posters, Pamphlets

Winter Job Drive First Step Taken

First step in the National Employment Service-sponsored winter employment campaign has begun.

Posters and pamphlets are being distributed to home owners and employers, urging them to plan to have work done during the winter, rather than hold it over until spring or summer.

LITTLE CHANGED

A spokesman for the National Employment Service said last night that the unemployment situation in Victoria is little changed from last week.

Unemployed men registered with the NES total 2,100, and a further 1,030 women are also registered.

"Poor employment conditions in the shipbuilding and construction industries continues to retard any marked improvement in the local picture," the spokesman said.

MANY HIRED

He pointed out that although many women have been hired in recent weeks, they have been replaced on the NES rolls by wives of unemployed tradesmen.

Meanwhile, two Greater Victoria municipalities have no plans to take advantage of the federal government's winter works grant scheme.

Spokesmen for Victoria and Saanich criticized Labor Minister

Starr's announcement that the period during which the federal government grants will be available has been increased by six weeks, starting Oct. 15 instead of Dec. 1.

WHOLE SCHEME

Spokesmen for Esquimalt and Oak Bay announced their municipalities will take part in the whole scheme.

Victoria and Saanich criticism was against the "late" announcement of the extension. They said no funds were included in annual budgets to allow them to take advantage of the offer.

Cubs on Tour

Boy Scouts Awarded Badges

Greater Victoria Boy Scouts awarded proficiency badges in the past week were:

Cyclist, Ronnie Booth and Graham Terison; collectors, Billy Martin; toy-makers, Ronnie Booth and Brian Town; leaping wolf, Peter Lax; Queen's Scout, Ian Muir; first class, Paul Willing; swimmers, Joe Jackson, Bob McQuade, David Jackson, Denis Argyle, Lorne Argyle, Ron Holland and Darrell Bendell.

Some 20 Wolf Cubs of the 7th Camosun (Chinese-Pentecostal) pack were given a guided tour of the SPCA kennels on Wilson Street Saturday. Their Akela, Jessie Chan, was impressed with the attention the Cubs got and the trouble SPCA keepers went to giving the Cubs an interesting and enjoyable afternoon.

Personality Not Politics

HAY RIVER, N.W.T. (CP)

An election campaign in which political parties take a back seat to personalities is being waged in Canada's vast northern Mackenzie district.

Some 7,000 are eligible to vote in the Sept. 19 election to name four representatives to the Northwest Territories Council.

Candidates are permitted to fly a party banner but by tradition they stand as individuals and there is usually no mention of a political party.

The council has powers similar to those of a provincial legislature. Other five members are appointed by the federal government.

Public Power Proven

PENTICTON (CP)—Public power all across the country has demonstrated its efficiency, CCF national leader Hazen Argue said here Saturday night.

"If you want this commodity at cost, a CCF government will take steps to restore these utilities to the public domain," said Mr. Argue at a political rally.

Three Ridings

Rallies Wind Up CCF Campaigns

CCF candidates in three Greater Victoria ridings last night held rallies to end their campaigns.

Mrs. May Campbell, one of three CCF candidates in Victoria, said the people's intelligence has been "insulted" by the deluge of anti-CCF propaganda. She attacked "front organizations" like the B.C. Federation of Trade and Industry for making "misleading statements."

MAIN ISSUE

Employment is still the main issue in the minds of most voters, said Mrs. Campbell. She added: "The only permanent solution to the depression which is now rushing upon us is full employment. A provincial government must realize this and take action at once."

Her running mate, Mrs. Rhoda Erickson, told an afternoon meeting in Woodsworth Hall, employment is first on the list of things requiring immediate attention.

SAME ZEAL

"If the government had spent the same time, money and advertising to solve the jobless problem and help those in need, that it has squandered in trying to assure itself of re-election, Social Credit would be receiving commendation now, not condemnation," she said.

Neil Hindle, third Victoria candidate, said the people will decide Monday if they want the return of freedom of ity would be destroyed.

Winds Up Drive

Keep Socialism Out Bennett Tells B.C.

KELOWNA, B.C. (CP)—Premier Bennett wound up his election campaign here Saturday night with a two-hour address asking for "support for Social Credit regardless of politics."

He said the main question facing the voters Monday was a choice between "political paralysis of CCF and the dynamic growth possible under a Social Credit government."

"Liberals and Conservatives," he said, "cannot vote for those parties—they cannot split the vote and allow socialism to get a foothold."

FREE OF HECKLERS

The audience was relatively free of hecklers, who have been active at previous gatherings.

Premier Bennett defended the government policy on the controversial Wenner-Gren projects, stating "We have never given anything away and we never will."

The Social Credit government," he said, "has the highest morality of any government in Canada."

Also defending the trade union act, Premier Bennett said the labor legislation was "a charter for the working man who needs as much protection from labor bosses as he does from management bosses."

He charged the CCF opposition now has economical power as well as political power because of the labor association, and workmen "must not vote for CCF."

"This," he said, "is the great issue."

Boys' Band Plays Again

Victoria Boys' Band will resume its regular weekly practice at 6.45 p.m. Tuesday in Esquimalt community hall. The band was inactive during July and August.

TENNIS, ANYONE?

Victoria Table Tennis Association will hold its first meeting of the season Monday at 8 p.m. in the Duck Building, 1318 Broad Street. Anyone interested is invited.

Riggan in Race Record or Not

VANCOUVER Donald Riggan, who disclosed last week that he had a criminal record but blamed it on "secret service orders," definitely is standing as one of the two Social Credit candidates in Monday's provincial election.

He failed to file a letter of withdrawal, as he announced earlier he might do, with the Delta returning officer by the Saturday midnight deadline.

Mr. Riggan stated Friday he could not withdraw, because notice had to be filed 24 hours before polls opened and advance polls started Thursday. However, officials said he had until the beginning of the day before the election.

The Sacred said Thursday he served three years in a Prairie prison for stealing cash but said he was under secret service orders to watch a Nazi scientist in prison.

Students This Year Will Make History

The students pictured on this page will be among those making history when they start studies at Victoria University on Monday, Sept. 19.

They are the first to take advantage of the full four-year course offered for the first time at the university, formerly known as Victoria College.

Registration starts this week and hundreds of students will find their way up to the building overlooking the city.

Summer holidays and summer jobs are over. Preparations are well under way for a year's hard work for those who will enter the doors this historic year.

Talking plans over as opening day nears are Miss Lesley Humber, left, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Humber, and Miss Jennifer Botterell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Botterell. Pictured at back, Bruce Timbres, son of Mr. and Mrs. Stuart Timbres and Miss Sandra McKeachie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. G. McKeachie.

The floor is as good a place as any to support those heavy text books. The group pictured here will be spending many evenings this winter poring over these books. From left to right, Susie Foster, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Foster, Alan

Leaving for the East

Mrs. John L. Geddes and her three children, Christopher Mark, eight months, Pamela Anne, two and a half, and Susan Margaret, five and a half, have been holidaying here. They stayed first with Mrs. Geddes' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Eric Marshall, Victoria Avenue, and now are with Mr. Geddes' parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Geddes, Ten Mile Point. Mr. Geddes came from Penticton and joined his family here on Friday. The young family will leave Monday for Hamilton, Ont., where Mr. Geddes will take a course at McMaster University.

Mollet-Bickford

New Home In Saanich

Brentwood United Church was decorated with yellow and white gladiolus last evening for the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Bickford, West Saanich Road, and Mr. Kenneth Charles Mollet, son of Mr. and Mrs. K. C. Mollet, Deep Cove.

Paul H. Todd officiated and during the signing of the register, Miss Georgia Neal sang "The Wedding Prayer." Mrs. R. Ronson was organist.

The bride was a picture in her gown of lustrous white satin and overskirt of nylon organza, fashioned with high neckline, lily point sleeves and full length skirt. Her chapel length veil of fine net was held by a coronet of iridescent sequins and seed pearls and she carried a bouquet of red roses and stephanotis.

Mrs. Doreen Elvedahl, matron of honor, and Sharon Bickford, flower girl, sisters of the bride, wore identical dresses of soft yellow broadtaffeta with cummerbunds to tone. Mrs. Janet Lowe, bridesmaid, and Miss Mary Mollet, bridesmaid, sisters of the groom, wore similar dresses of tulle with flower head bands.

All the attendants carried bouquets of bronze chrysanthemums.

Mr. Donald Watling was best man and Mr. Bruce Elvedahl and Mr. Duncan Gurton showed guests to pews marked with white satin bows.

Brentwood Community Hall was decorated with autumn flowers for the reception following the ceremony. A three tiered cake set in tulle, flanked by sweetpeas and white candles, centred the bride's table. Mr. Frank Rendle, uncle of the bride, proposed the toast. When the couple returned from a honeymoon in Washington and Banff they will move into their new home on the West Saanich Road.

The bride's going away costume was an ocean green dressmaker suit, with cocoa brown accessories and corsage of yellow rosebuds.

Your Problems

By Ann Landers

Dear Ann Landers: I'm not sending my name and address because I can't take a chance on having my husband see your answer. If Bennie knew what financial shape we are in he'd kill me.

Bennie gives me his pay envelope every Friday and takes out $7 for himself. He tells everybody I'm a wonderful manager.

In the past two years I've bought a freezer, sewing machine, new TV, had siding put on the house, ordered custom made drapes and wall-to-wall carpeting. In May I signed a contract for landscaping.

I'm up to my neck in debts, and dizzy from dodging bill collectors. I shake whenever the mail comes for fear Bennie will see a dunning letter. I hate to answer the telephone or the doorbell. All this worrying has made me afraid of my shadow.

I know you can't pay my bills, Ann, but if you have some advice on how to handle this mess I've made I'd be grateful. —I.O. EVERYBODY.

Dear U. O.: Stop hiding. Face your creditors in person, by phone or by mail. Tell them you're in a temporary bind but that you intend to pay your bill in full when you can.

List your debts on paper. Send each creditor something out of every pay check—no matter how small. It will demonstrate your good faith and you'll feel less like a dead-beat. And for heaven's sake, promise yourself you won't buy a nickel's worth that's not absolutely essential until you're in the clear.

Dear Ann: The other day I looked out the window and saw the neighbor woman shaking my child. I ran out and asked her what she thought she was doing. She said, "Your Dickie is forever slapping my Harvey and I'm sick of seeing my little one take the worst of it." (They are both three, but my boy is larger.)

With that I hauled off and slapped her. I told her she'd get more than that if she ever laid a hand on my child again.

My husband hadn't been home five minutes when the neighbor's husband came over. He told my husband his wife was a nervous wreck and he had to call the doctor for her. He also said they could sue me for assault and battery.

I say they have no grounds because I didn't injure her. It was just a slap. My husband is mad at me. Please reply in print.—N.S.

Dear N.S.: The kids are three years old—what's YOUR excuse? You could be sued, even if it was just a slap. And your husband has a right to be mad; your behavior was uncivilized.

Dear Ann: A woman who lives in our apartment treats her pet poodle better than most people treat their kids. The dog sleeps on a satin quilt, eats special food, gets his toenails painted and has professional baths.

I say this is a disgrace, when there are so many underfed people in the world. What do you say?—DIZZ-GUSTED

Dear Dizz: You can't give the underfed peoples of the world dog food, so don't confuse the issue.

I DO agree that nail-polish on pets is asinine and it's revolting to see dogs treated as if they were babies.

Are your parents too strict? You can benefit from the experience of thousands of teenagers if you write for ANN LANDERS' booklet, "How To Live With Your Parents," enclosing your request 20 cents in coin and a large, self-addressed, stamped envelope. Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Clothes Make Your Man

By HARRY JUSTER

Dear Mr. Juster: Who makes up these rules on so-called proper dress? I was not allowed in an amusement park ballroom, of all places, because I was without a coat. This strikes me as ridiculous. Would you mind telling where there's any rhyme or reason to this?—ART

Let's analyze this a bit. Coats unnecessary? Next, no ties. Then we decide a tee shirt's more comfortable. Where do you draw the line? True, a park-ballroom is no Stork Club. However, if the management decided that men should wear coats, they're merely saying, "We think most people enjoy dancing in a pleasant atmosphere. Being well-dressed helps keep it that way." What's wrong with that?

Dear Mr. Juster: What's the scoop on vests for college wear? I'm thinking of getting two suits before going back to school. One for dress and the other for general use. Would you go for suits with vests? I don't want to look like an odd ball on campus.—C.T.

You won't. You'll see vests as for your wearing them, that's a matter of personal taste. I like the reversible sport type that adds a colorful touch to a shetland, tweed or any other casual looking suit. However, I see no reason for a regular vest with a dress-up suit outside of serving as a parking place for pens, pencils, etc.

Dear Mr. Juster: Our son is being married this month. As it will be an evening wedding he and the ushers are wearing white dinner jackets. The ushers plan to wear black bow ties. Should his be white or black also? He doesn't think this is an important detail, but it has us a bit confused.—MRS. M. H.

Not as important, perhaps, as making certain that he has the ring. But no detail should be overlooked at a function as momentous as a wedding—especially your own. Follow this simple rule. A white formal bow tie is never worn except with tails. All members of the wedding party wear the same color tie with a matching cummerbund.

Dear Mr. Juster: Please tell me if it's considered good taste to wear white short-sleeved shirts with a suit. I can see the argument for comfort and I like to see men comfortable but, somehow, I can't reconcile myself to hairy wrists as opposed to a quarter inch of crisp white cuff.—MRS. B. D. M.

Since when is a man's wrist an undesirable object? You women are wise. You wear practical clothing when the temperature soars. Why criticize a man for exposing a fraction of an inch more of his wrist in order to be a little more comfortable? I like white cuffs too, but not at 90 degrees. Let's be reasonable.

TIP FOR THE DAY

Creases are fine in your trousers; but not in the lapels of your coat. A flat look is unflattering. When you have your jacket pressed be sure to say, "Roll the lapels, please." This soft, graceful touch gives your entire coat a much more balanced look.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilkins Motor to California

Pink and white was the color scheme carried out for the wedding of Diana Joan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Hasanen, Honeymoon Bay, B.C., and Mr. Robert Henry Wilkins, son of Mrs. Wilkins, Virden, Man., and the late Mr. Harry Wilkins.

Mr. D. C. Marshall of Vancouver performed the double ceremony last evening in Metropolitan United Church, which was decorated with Esther Reid daisies and Gladiolus.

The bride, who walked to the altar with her father, wore a gown of white nylon organza over taffeta, featuring a scalloped neckline outlined with lace and iridescent sequins.

and full, hooped skirt slightly entrain. A tiara of lace, seed pearls and sequins held her chapel-length veil and she carried deep red roses and heather. Her pearl necklace was a gift from the groom.

Mrs. B. Buckner of Campbell River was matron of honor for her cousin, and wore a strapless gown topped with a jacket of pink nylon over net and taffeta with full skirt and bow at the waistline.

Bridesmaids were Miss Marilyn Waite and Miss Gladys Wilkins, the groom's sister. They wore dresses of pink organza which had sashes flowing from the waistline. They all carried pink carnation bouquets.

Leslie Hasanen of Campbell River was flower girl for her cousin and wore a short pink nylon dress over taffeta and carried a basket of pink carnations.

Mr. M. Currier was best man and Mr. Bradley Hasanen, the bride's brother, and Mr. J. Buckner of Ladysmith showed guests to pews marked with pink bows.

A reception was held at the Golden Slipper, where red roses in silver vases flanked the three-tiered cake that centred the bride's table. Mr. Ken Hasanen of Campbell River proposed the bridal toast.

Leaving for a wedding trip by motor to California, the new Mrs. Wilkins wore a mint green suit with mink collar, beige accessories and corsage of Johanna Hill roses.

Miss Anne Williams Bride of K. Dibden

A waltz-length gown of white lace over taffeta was chosen by Anne Catherine Williams for her marriage to Kenneth Douglas Dibden in St. Paul's Naval Garrison Church, Friday evening. The gown was cut on princess lines with scalloped neckline and elbow-length sleeves. White satin flowers, centred with pearls, held the shoulder-length veil. She carried a colonial bouquet of Talsman roses.

Gladiolus decorated the church for ceremony at which Rev. J. A. Roberts officiated. Organist was Master David Palmer. Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Williams, 3421 Cook Street, and Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Dibden, 3431 Doncaster Drive. Mr. Williams gave his daughter in marriage.

Deep peach toned iridescent taffeta gown, styled on princess lines, was worn by the only attendant, Miss Betty Penningroth. She carried a bouquet of pale peach roses.

Howard Sadler was best man and Gary Dibden ushered guests to their seats.

Reception was held in the home of the bride's parents where D. Cotton proposed the toast. A three-tier wedding cake centred the head table which was covered with a lace cloth.

Teal blue gown, black duster and matching accessories were chosen for the new Mrs. Dibden for travelling on a honeymoon motor trip to the United States. On return the newlyweds will make their home at 3301 Kingsley Street.

English Visitor Taken On Night Kangaroo Hunt

A 40-hour ride from Townsville to Mt. Isa on a freight train where she talked to showmen and rovers and watched emus and dingos in their natural habitat.

A kangaroo hunt by Land Rover at night over rough country.

A visit to a whaling station in Queensland where she saw "whales being carved up."

Watching the almost unbelievable colored fish and coral from Green Island on the Great Barrier Reef.

These are just a few of the memories Miss Gillian Adams will take back to England from Australia.

Gillian, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Adams, The Brown House, Woking, Surrey, and London, left England in mid-October last year and is now in Victoria en route home.

She is staying with Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Dunn, 645 Radcliffe Lane.

SEE THE WORLD

It was a desire to see a bit more of the world that sent Gillian off to Australia last fall. She went by ship through the Suez and is enthusiastic about sea travel.

On reaching Australia she visited friends for awhile and then took a job as mother's help in Melbourne.

It was while she was in this job that she had a near thing when staying at Mt. Elizabeth, a lovely beach resort.

One day in the water she saw a nice looking fish close in near the shore. She suggested to a 12-year-old boy that he catch it and that they "would take it home for tea." It was a poisonous sting-ray—a fish that doesn't usually come so close in.

Gillian spent some time in Tasmania, Canberra and Sydney. The Royal Easter show in Sydney she describes as "simply fantastic." The colorful parade in the big arena she is not likely to forget in a hurry.

Many kangaroo hunters take the skins to be tanned and sold to the growing industry of koala bear toys but her party settled for tails to be made into soup.

The kangaroos are considered a menace by the farmers as they eat more than the sheep and besides breaking fences, do a lot of other damage.

Gillian flew from Australia to New Zealand where she visited before coming to San Francisco and on to Victoria. She leaves here tomorrow bound for Vancouver, then on to Bisco, B.C., Calgary, Winnipeg, Montreal, Boston and

It was decided to hold the fair on Saturday, Oct. 29, and plans were made to begin work on the fair immediately after school opens.

SPCA Organizer Here on Visit

Mrs. Eva West of Vancouver was entertained at luncheon on Saturday by the Junior SPCA Group Committee members, Mrs. B. Redpath, Mrs. J. Reading and Mrs. M. Aldersmith. Mrs. West was guest speaker at the Victoria Junior Group's meeting in the afternoon at the SPCA Shelter, 111 Wilson Street. Mrs. West is the organizer of the Junior Group in Vancouver which she formed in 1958 with some 500 youngsters becoming members.

Garden Notes

Burn It All, Disinfect

BY M. V. CHESNUT, FRHS

GLOOMY GLADS (P.S. Victoria)

The death of the foliage on your gladioli, followed by the rotting of the bulbs, is caused by a fungus infection. I suggest that you lift all affected plants carefully, taking a good ball of soil around the roots, and burn plant, soil and all. Treat the hole with some household disinfectant—formaldehyde, Creolin, Lysol, etc.—and be sure to coat each bulb after lifting this fall with Spengen Gladiolus Dust or Later's Bulb Dust.

BLUE NEMESIA (L.Y. Victoria)

I am so glad your Nemesia seeds, turned out so well and I am particularly happy to hear that you found a good gentian blue flower in the mixture. By all means, save the seeds from this flower—they may not come true, but it is well worth a try. Nemesia strumosa, in its wild state in South Africa, blooms in a very wide range of colors, but never in blue. Plant scientists in England succeeded in crossing it with another species, Nemesia versicolor, thereby introducing blue shades into the range of colors found in the modern garden hybrids. Pale blue shades show fairly frequently, but a rich clear blue such as yours is something of a rarity still.

ACACIA SUCKERS (E.E.S. Victoria)

It would have been better if you had killed your 70-year-old Acacia tree before cutting it down by treating the foliage with Brushkill, as it is difficult to get the poison to the roots except by way of the leaf pores.

The roots are bound to die eventually if the suckers coming up in your lawn are cut down regularly and frequently during the course of mowing. If suckers are coming up elsewhere than in the lawn, it would be best to allow them to grow and develop some foliage before spraying with Brushkill.

It is important when using this weedkiller not to apply it in a stronger solution than the instructions call for. If a too-strong mixture is sprayed on the foliage, it may kill the leaves too quickly, before they have a chance to pass it on down to the roots.

MYSTERY SHRUBS (M.R.G. Victoria)

The twig you sent me looks to me like Escallonia, but I am not sure which variety—it could be Laneyensis, Rubra, or Donard Beauty. The Escallonias are South American shrubs, highly wind-resistant and especially good for seaside plantings. They are raised quite easily from cuttings taken in late summer and inserted in a coldframe or even in the open.

I am afraid I have no data on the Hungarian Prune plum, as to whether this variety needs a mate or not. Italian Prune is able to set some fruit without a husband, but all plums do much better when cross-pollinated. The variety Victoria is a universal donor, making a good mate for any other plum tree.

SEEDLING FRUIT TREE (E.C. Victoria) Judging by the twig you sent me, the "volunteer" tree in your garden is a member of the apple family but, until it comes into blossom and starts to bear fruit, it is impossible to say what variety. Trees started from pips or seeds will usually take quite a long time before bearing, often as long as 15 years. That is why purchased fruit trees are always grafted specimens.

PLUM PRUNING (M.McD. Victoria)

The Modified Lorette system of pruning which you are using for your apple and pear trees would be unsuitable for your Yellow Egg plum. Generally speaking, plums don't take kindly to really severe cutting, but an upright grower like your Yellow Egg should have the inside laterals taken off and some of the leaders headed back to outward-growing laterals to encourage a more spreading habit of growth.

The best time to prune a plum tree is immediately after the crop is gathered or, in a tree not yet of fruiting age, in midsummer.

The Viewing World

By John Crosby

Everyone's a Star Now

Movies are dirtier than ever, aren't they? It poses quite a problem nowadays finding a movie to take the children to.

Some years back, in an effort to combat television, the motion picture industry stumbled on the device of the block buster. It was discovered that if one movie star per picture would gross X amount of dollars, three movie stars per picture would gross three times that much. Well, now the picture people have applied the block buster principle to adultery. If one adultery grosses X dollars, three adulteries will gross 3X dollars.

This lovely rule has been used with stunning success on "From the Terrace," a movie which Twentieth Century Fox has announced proudly has broken the record set by "Peyton Place," another dirty movie that Fox spawned.

Frankly, I haven't seen "Psycho" and I don't intend to. A friend, who is very gifted at describing movies, gave me a corpse-by-corpse, horror-by-horror account of it including the ending, the telling of which Alfred Hitchcock has proclaimed a crime just a little below treason. I'm not nearly so interested in the movie as in the argument it has aroused. I know a woman who had to call her psychiatrist to quiet her after seeing it, and has hardly slept since. There have been cries that censorship must be reimposed (and it will be if this keeps up). The other side contends that scaring people is an old theatrical stock in trade, harking clear back to the ancient Greeks.

My own feeling is quite simple. There are limits. "Psycho" has gone way beyond it. I think the current taste for sexual sadism is a form of perversion that ought to be controlled by law, if necessary, because it is dangerous to the national welfare. It is interesting to note that the French, who are notoriously open-minded about sex, won't allow our more violent TV shows on their air. French government officials have explained with Gallic rationale that the shows very probably would be just as popular in France as here, but they simply don't think that a diet of violence is good for their people, and especially for their children.

In trying to cope with the current trend, the movie critics are using that good old word, "amoral," more and more often. "Oceans 11" is a movie that has especially stimulated the use of the word "amoral," which it certainly is. In this movie, a commando team composed of Frank Sinatra, Sammy Davis Jr., Dean Martin, Peter Lawford, and some others less renowned, hold up five Las Vegas casinos in as light-hearted a way as possible. What strikes everyone about this caper is the total absence of social disapproval. The boys engage in it more or less in a spirit of someone chalking windows on Halloween. They're not— it sometimes seems—even interested in the money so much as the sport of the thing. Their own punishment is disappointment.

One other observation about the picture business and I'll shut up. Everyone's a star now. The credits for "Oceans 11" open with Frank Sinatra's name, followed by the other members of the Rat Pack, in order of their importance. Then you see "Also Starring" and, by George, you get another list of half a dozen names. Then come the featured players, a pathetic little roster of nonentities (or more probably actors who have less aggressive agents), and finally you get "guest stars," for heaven's sakes. The total number of people actually starred in "Oceans 11" are thirteen.

THE VOICE OF ONE

By REV. DR. FRANK S. MORLEY

Last night we had dinner at a Howard Johnson's restaurant—my wife and I and our four youngest children. Naturally we spent some time on the children's menu, and that children's menu at Howard Johnson's struck me as one of the great masterpieces of American civilization. Let me describe it to you.

On the inside double-page spread there is, of course, the menu itself—eight different children's lunch and dinner combinations, all neatly worked out to suit the little dears' wayward tastes. (Peanut-butter-and-jelly sandwich, buttered toast triangles—you know what I mean.)

The other pages contain the following items:

Cows Move Up

On pages 2 and 3 there is the menu with clips to move an ingenious game to be along. On page 4 (following the basic principle of hooks and actual menu) there is a ladders. A passing police car "double doodle dot" game puts you two spaces ahead, a two sets of orange and blue fire engine one space back, a numbered dots to connect, detour sign one space back, a (Hint to the younger set: it church two spaces ahead, cows comes out a chicken and a (any number) one space ahead, flower.)

Since a board and moving On page 7 there's a licence pieces can't be handled in a number score card with spaces car, the genius behind the for all the 50 states. (Yes Howard Johnson's children's Alaska, Hawaii and the Dis-menus has worked out a track triet of Columbia are all of spaces around the edges of on it.)

Ice Cream Game

Finally, on the back page there wasn't any mocha chip, there is "Howard Johnson's mocha walnut or Swiss chocolate cream. Game-check the late almond, but maybe it's popular flavors as you try good for children to learn them."

Of course you may say that is. They did get their dishes this last "game" in jets an ele of chocolate chip, macaroon ment of crass commercialism; and burgundy cherry and but then, on the other hand, everybody was happy. our children did have a lot of. Anyway, that children's fun ordering the three most menu, I repeat, is a monu- exotic of the 28 listed flavors, ment of our civilization—way (The baby was content with up there with the Empire State half of my own ice cream.) When Will Stereo All Be This Good?

By CLYDE GILMOUR

I've had certain misgivings about stereophonic discs, many of which torment me with objectionable surface noise since I converted my home-listening system to stereo.

Many a private customer and four or five outspoken members of the Canadian record industry have told me they, too, are being plagued by intolerable clicks, pops, thuds and other non-musical tribulations.

STEREO ONLY

These complaints, let me emphasize, apply chiefly to the new two-channel or stereo LP discs, not to the standard LP recordings. Surface noise nowadays is seldom a problem on standard hi-fi pressings.

Moreover, the squawks are aimed against only some stereo releases, not all of them.

The other day I was conducted through the huge Scarborough plant of Quality Records Ltd., which does the Canadian pressing and packaging for Mercury, MGM, 20th Century Fox, United Artists, Dot and several other labels.

By watching closely and asking dozens of questions I was able to satisfy myself that this large (and presumably typical) modern disc factory is obviously using meticulous care and precision all along the line.

Show Business

By Dick Williams

During a recent concert in Evansville, Ind., George Gobel was visited backstage by Rev. Robert A. Martin, once an assistant minister at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church in Chicago where, the comedian was a choir boy.

Before leaving the Chicago church some years ago, the pastor examined some religious prints stored in a vacant room. One in the Garden of Eden. Penciled in at the bottom of the print was this comment: "Making whoopee!"

Said Mr. Martin: "It has taken me 30 years to catch up with you to ask whether you're the guilty author."

"I refuse to answer," mumbled Lonesome George, "on the grounds that it might tend to incriminate me."

Classic Brought to Life

Big New 'Ben Hur' Powerful, Appealing

By BERT BINNY

Seeing that "Ben-Hur" has been produced on stage and screen many times before and that the book has not been out of print in 80 years, there can be only two valid reasons for another production.

The first would be to keep this admitted classic alive and to introduce it to a generation which knows it only by name.

The second would be to improve on all previous productions by the application of new techniques to make it more impressive than ever before.

The danger is that the second of these motives could negate the first by making the film so super-colossal that the story would be lost and the events recounted would become like a herd of gaudy elephants with no place to go.

SELDOM HAPPENS

However this happens infrequently in MGM's latest version of Gen. Lew Wallace's fantastically successful story. The events surrounding the Crucifixion, for example, are overdone, but the Nativity sequence is superb. For the most part modern techniques, panoramic scenes, lovely color and marvellous effects support the story rather than detract from it.

Some of the scenes are unduly protracted. It did not seem that the story, as told, required four hours in the telling. But there was convincing and sensitive acting throughout, not only among the principals but equally among the lesser parts; particularly those played by Hugh Griffith, Terence Longdon, Jose Greco, Laurence Payne and George Relph. Frank Thring's Pontius Pilate, on the other hand, was very hard to accept if Biblical references as to his character mean anything.

Some scenes, such as that with the Sheikh and his chariot horses, were supremely appealing and the dramatic impact of such as the triumph of Arius and the chariot race itself was enormous.

Ben-Hur shows at the Royal for at least the next two weeks, daily at 1.30 and 8.

It is a powerful production, but also gentle and human as occasion requires. Perhaps these last are its greatest triumphs.

BLUENOSE AT HEIGHT OF HER FAME

For Tourist Excursions

Nova Scotia Keen On New Bluenose

LUNenburg, N.S. (CP)—Now that they've built a new HMS Bounty here, some Nova Scotians are talking enthusiastically about building a replica of another famous vessel—the racing schooner Bluenose.

The reproduction of the Bounty, the Royal Navy ship whose crew mutinied against Capt. William Bligh in the Pacific nearly 200 years ago, was built here for a Hollywood movie which plans a new filming of the classic "Mutiny on the Bounty."

When the new Bounty was launched at the Smith and Rhuland yards, more than one Lunenburg, with salt water in his veins said "The next thing we need is a replica of the Bluenose."

The Bluenose suggestion has been heard before, since she was wrecked on a reef off Haiti in 1946 while operating as a cargo carrier, stripped of her towering masts and driven by diesel power.

SAME YARDS

But the launching of the new Bounty was bound to revive the idea, since the 143-foot Bluenose was built in the same yards in 1921 with the intention of recovering for Nova Scotia the international fishermen's racing trophy that was won by the Gloucester, Mass., schooner Esperanto in 1920, the first of the races.

Bluenose defended the trophy against the finest craft that New England could build, and was never beaten in an official fishermen's race.

"If we built another Bluenose while the men are still around who can build her like she was, then we'd really have something," says Capt. Angus Walters, who skippered the original Bluenose.

"She wouldn't have to be built for sailing or speed like the old one," said Angus. "She could be built for twice-a-week excursions for the tourists in fine weather. If the money could be found, it would all come back."

MUST BE SEEN

It seems to be agreed that if such a project is to be undertaken, it must be done soon.

"When they built the Bluenose they had good plans, sure enough," said a veteran shipwright. "But they didn't always stick to the plans. They built her as they thought she should go. A lot of the men who worked on her and knew how she was built are gone. If we're to build another, it has to be done by the men who know how to do it."

But the skilled veterans who built the fast wooden schooners are becoming fewer and fewer.

'All Men Are Little Boys'

By FRED DANZIG

NEW YORK (UPI)—Jonathan Winters folded his pup tent the other night and ended a "way-out four-minute binnacle as one of Jack Paar's vacation replacements.

Fall, summer or spring, I dig Winters. Surrounding himself with a squad of old, good friends, Winters strung together a highly entertaining chain of programs with his spot-on, dart-like comedy and above all, his warmth.

He's an awesome mimic. His squints and snorts drive home his lightning fast sallies into and out of character roles. He commands attention because there is no way of predicting what he will do or say next.

The portrait that emerged of this gifted performer was of a kind, sentimental, selfish fellow. Perhaps the choicest sample was on Tuesday when he told a charming story about the day his grand father took him to see a burlesque show.

I also learned that the core of his comedy deals with children. On Monday he said, "I'm a little boy at heart. All men are little boys."

His characters, from Maude Frickett to the space man, age simply little boys who are filled with mischievous and sometimes violent schemes.

A former marine, "It's a minority group and that's why I always plug for them," Winters mentions a soldier who kept a teddy bear in the foot locker. And he portrays

A preliminary musical center, in the form of a concert on the Parliament Buildings grounds, takes place at 2:30 next Sunday afternoon.

KISS ME, KATE

Beethoven's "Consecration of the House" overture and the second movement of his "Pastoral" symphony will be heard along with Intermzzo from Granados' "Goyescas" and excerpts from "The King and I" and "Kiss Me, Kate."

Regular subscription concerts start Oct. 2 with an entirely orchestral program.

Items at this concert, and on Oct. 3, include two Beethoven works: The seventh symphony and "Consecration of the House" along with Haydn's symphony No. 88 and De Falla's "The Three Corners Hat," from which three dances will be played.

First guest artist, 16-year-old pianist Patricia Perrin of Toronto, appears Oct. 23 and 24. She plays Beethoven's C-Major concerto for piano and orchestra.

HAYDN THEME

Mozart and Brahms provide the two remaining items, Mozart's 36th symphony and Brahms' variations on a theme of Haydn.

Clifford Evans conducts the third pair of concerts Nov. 6 and 7 when the guest artist will be violinist Esther Glazer. Paganini's first concerto for violin and orchestra will be Miss Glazer's item.

Completing the program will be works of Rossini, overture to "The Barber of Seville," Faure, suite from "Peleas and Melisande," Tchaikovsky, fifth symphony, and Darius, intermezzo from "Fenimore and Gerda."

Mr. Evans appears as a soloist at the following concerts Nov. 27 and 28. He appears as violinist with Mary Evans as cellist.

BENVENUTO CELLINI

The double concerto for violin, cello and orchestra by Brahms* is the solo number. Something new, different and, vastly intriguing comes up at the fifth pair of concerts, Dec. 11 and 12, when Lord's Puppets, choral and vocal soloists, appear in popular classics. Beethoven's ninth symphony follows the intermission.

The new year starts with both a guest conductor and a guest pianist featured Jan. 15 and 16. The pianist is the delightful Sheila Bates, daughter of Mrs. Gertrude Bates, who is a symphony violinist.

Miss Bates will play Beethoven's fourth concerto.

Guest conductor is Alexander Gibson, conductor of the Scottish National Orchestra.

There are two pairs of concerts in February. Pianist Ronald Turini appears Feb. 5 and 6 and the Seattle Symphony Orchestra, with conductor Milton Katims, Feb. 26 and 27.

ROMAN CARNIVAL

Mr. Turini will play Rachmaninoff's rhapsody for piano and orchestra on a theme by Paganini. This is preceded by Sir John Barbirolli's arrangement of an Elizabethan suite and Bela Bartok's Orchestra concerto.

There are four items in the Seattle orchestra program. A suite from Couperin-Milhaud's "La Sultana" opens the concert, followed by Stravinsky's "Petrushka."

DON JUAN

The second half has Griffes' "The Pleasure Dome of Kubla Khan" and Strauss's "Don Juan."

Ninth pair of concerts take place March 19 and 20 when soprano Elizabeth Benson-Guy is the guest artist. She sings Strauss's "Four Last Songs" for soprano and orchestra. Other items will be Mahler's Adagio for strings and harp from his fifth symphony, Bruckner's seventh symphony, and the polka and fugue from Weinberger's "Schwanda the Bagpiper."

The 20th season closes April 9 and 10 when native Victorian Robin Wood is the guest artist. The program is an all-Tchaikovsky affair with the sixth ("Pathétique") symphony in the first half and the piano concerto in the second.

Items starred in the above list are those to be heard for the first time at these concerts.

Carer or Husband First? Margaret Leighton Dilemma

By SHELLAH GRAHAM

HOLLYWOOD (ANSA) — The big issue for Laurence Harvey and Margaret Leighton is, will she come to Hollywood and live with him while he stars in "The Spinster," "Summer and Smoke" and, possibly "Walk on the Wild Side" with Rita Hayworth?

Margaret is a top stage actress. To be with her husband, which she wants to be, in the "Dust," liked it and now her career will have to take second place. Larry won't allow this. And when he is in Hollywood without her, the rumors of a romance with Mrs. Joan Cohn are all over the place. I know what I would do in her place. The question is, will she?

Fred Astaire's choreographer, Hermes Pan, insists that he will only direct a TV spec "if Juliet Browne is starred. I want to show what this talented girl can really do." That is what Frank Sinatra has been saying since she appeared with him in "Can Can."

Elvis Presley has also been Romeo to Juliet. This girl definitely has something.

David Niven, who will be with "Guns of Navarone" until mid-October, may not have a chance to return to the U.S. before he starts "The Two Colonels" for Columbia in Italy. But in spite of all the pictures to be made abroad, I sense a return — slight, but definite — of picture-making to Hollywood.

Why do the four sons of Bing Crosby only fall in love with Las Vegas showgirls? Gary is the latest to succumb. I can answer in the words of their pretty cousin, Cathy Crosby: "They have an inferiority complex. They're nice and would have been appreciated by debutantes, girls of good education and family, but they have never believed they are quite good enough."

Martha Hyer is hoping to bring back the long-hair look.

Up to $1,000 Offered For New Art

Canada Council Plans Grant to City Gallery

The Canada Council has offered to match dollars up to $1,000 spent by Greater Victoria art gallery on purchase of paintings by living Canadian artists.

The choice of paintings to be purchased by the gallery will be made following a showing here in November of canvases by leading artists from all over Canada.

MAJOR SHOWS

Curator Colin Graham yesterday announced the list of its major exhibitions for the coming months, selected from 40 exhibitions planned for the 12 months starting Sept. 15.

For the last half of September there will be an exhibition of Dutch and Flemish Masters from Britain's national loan collection trust. On at the same time will be a show of bird paintings by Victoria artist Fenwick Lansdowne.

ARTS OF NEPAL

Following in October will be the first exhibition of the arts of Nepal to be shown on this continent. It contains rare objects dating back to the 9th century AD.

In November, another Victoria painter, Sid Barron, will share the spotlight with a large one-man exhibition of Japan's greatest 19th-century painter Tessa.

The Tessa exhibition was a major art show at the Vancouver International Festival this summer.

In January there will be a display of rare primitive arts from Central America; in February, drawings by the French sculptor Rodin, and central feature for March will be an American collection of paintings by leading European painters.

Let's talk REAL ESTATE

By DON WHYTE
ATOMIC REAL ESTATE

If the international situation becomes any more serious, I can see that along with a house and land, we will also be selling bomb shelters, or at the government wishes them to be called, Fallout Shelters. They could become a feature of every home, the Real Estate sales ads would probably be something like this:

COSY BUNGALOW

"COSY FALLOUT SHELTER" "Every convenience for the modern family, located in basement, it serves as an extra guest bedroom or a doghouse for Dad. Built-in bar stocked with the best products. The home without a basement will have to have this Cosy Fallout Shelter. A typical ad for a home for sale with this type might be:

"Beautifully landscaped, Bomb Shelter and Bar-B-Que, with all outdoor facilities. Mothers get away from the children—hide in this comfortable Bomb Shelter, soundproof, complete with built-in bar. Of course if an atomic war did happen, there probably wouldn't be much Real Estate left to sell. However, the inventive Real Estate mind will always come up with some superlatives."

PAPER PROBLEM

At present the observatory uses a seismograph which records quakes and their intensities on photographic paper. The paper had to be developed and fixed before seismologists could find out intensity and exact time of the tremors.

ALMOST INSTALLED

A new type of seismograph is almost installed, director W. H. Milne said. This will use a pen on a strip of paper to trace a visible record which can be inspected immediately.

Yesterday's tremor recorded an intensity of 4½ on the Richter Scale, which goes up to 10. No damage was reported.

Rich Kennedy Real Danger Says Hoffa

WASHINGTON (AP)—James Hoffa has told Teamsters' Union members the Democratic presidential nominee "has never worked a day in his life with his hands."

Hoffa writes about Senator Kennedy in the monthly magazine of the 1,600,000-member union which he leads.

"Indeed," Hoffa says, "this man presents a very real danger to our life as a nation if he is successful in buying our country's highest office."

The Teamsters' executive decided to conduct a strong campaign against Kennedy without supporting Republican Richard Nixon.

Cowichan Crash Being Probed

DUNCAN — Police are investigating the crash yesterday morning at the corner of Cherry Point Road and the Trans-Canada Highway 1A, south of Cowichan Bay.

An estimated $250 damage was done to cars driven by J. H. Adlington, Cowichan Bay, and R. E. Luckovitch, Cobble Hill.

U.S. Says:

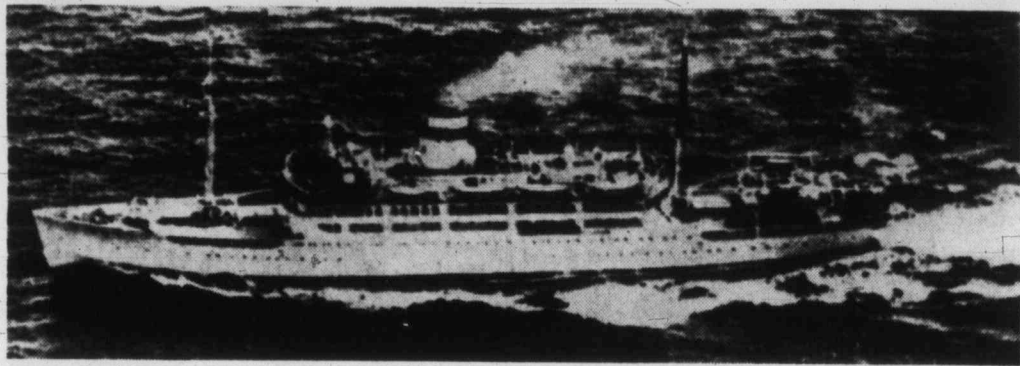

Won't Let
Flout UN

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — The U.S. said Saturday night it would not stand idly by and see the Soviet Union flout the United Nations' will in the Congo. (See also Page 3.)

U.S. delegate James J. Wadsworth was commenting on Soviet opposition to Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjöld's latest Congo proposals — which include temporary disarming of some Congolese military units.

There was no clear indication of what the U.S. action might be and nothing is expected before the council meets again Monday.

"We cannot agree with disarmament of troops, on his (Hammarskjöld's) own initiative, which are not named," said a Soviet spokesman.

Communist "Summit" Liner Heads Towards New York

Red 'Summit'
Heads to U.S.

MOSCOW (UPI) — Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev's floating "Communist Summit"—the Russian liner Baltika—sailed past Sweden and Denmark last night on its way to United Nations general assembly meeting in New York City.

There was no word from aboard the ship, which also is carrying the Communist party leaders of Hungary, Romania and Bulgaria, about the United States' announcement that Khrushchev would be restricted to Manhattan during his visit to the UN.

WHO'S WHO

Apart from the Russian leader a veritable who's who of world leaders are also converging on New York for what observers believe will be a sensational meeting.

Yugoslavia's Marshal Tito announced yesterday he would attend, and within hours word was received from Egypt that controversial Gamel Nasser would also attend in person.

Other "crisis" names who will join the melee are President Sukarno of Indonesia (personally invited by Khrushchev), Premier Sekou Toure of Guinea (now visiting Red China) and President Nkrumah of Ghana.

Khrushchev's party aboard the Baltika includes a complete roll call of satellite leaders. Interest in these will centre mostly on Janos Kadar, puppet premier of Hungary, Albania's Premier Mehmet Shehu, known to Albanian refugees as the "butcher of Albania," and Poland's fence-sitting premier, Wladyslaw Gomulka.

Each Germany's arch-Communist Walter Ulbricht has asked for—and will probably be granted—permission to attend the UN meeting as an observer. East Germany is not a UN member.

ALSO CONFIDENT

Informed sources here are also confident that two other highly controversial world leaders will also be present. They are Premier Fidel Castro of Cuba and Premier Ben-Gurion of Israel, arch-enemy of Nasser.

Notably absent from the proceedings will be the major Western leaders — President Eisenhower, Prime Minister Macmillan, President de Gaulle and India's Premier Nehru.

ONLY WORD

The only official word from the Khrushchev ship came from the official Soviet news agency Tass.

It said that Khrushchev, Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko and other officials were "busy with current affairs."

Tass said that Khrushchev cabled greetings to the Swedish, Danish and Norwegian governments when the Baltika passed within sight of Denmark and Sweden.

Casino Bandits Vanish

CAMPIONE, Italy (UPI) — Three dapper bandits robbed a gambling casino here early today and escaped with nearly $500,000.

The robbers described later as "well-dressed gentlemen," left a casino teller bound and gagged in his office, then vanished without a trace.

Hurricane Loss

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Hurricane Donna swirled inland through the heart of the Florida citrus belt Saturday night, dealing untold damage to the almost ripe, multi-million-dollar crop of oranges and grapefruit.

Tampa weather bureau estimated total damage in the state to be $2,000,000,000.

Warnings were ordered up along the Atlantic coast as far north as Savannah, Ga.

One hundred-mile-an-hour winds rocked Lakeland. Just before midnight the eye of the vicious storm was moving steadily north through central Florida.

Behind it, the killer hurricane left much of the lower Florida Gulf coast isolated. Fragmentary reports told of 13 injured in Fort Myers.

From Fort Myers, George Hunter of the Lee County disaster committee said roofs were blown from homes and stores.

"Some of the houses were blown clear over," he said during a brief telephone call. Communications later were disrupted.

One of the dead, truck driver Dwight Barnes of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., was drowned when his semi-trailer jackknifed and plunged him into the swirling river.

A youth was electrocuted at Winter Haven while trying to remove a television antenna; a Miami man died in a car accident on a rain-slicked highway, and a man's body was washed ashore at Tavernier in the Keys.

Strong Issues
Lacking

British Columbians last night were all-but-guaranteed a "fast track" for Monday's election with weatherman looking as far east as the Hudson Bay and as far south as California for sources of rain.

Temperatures in the Greater Victoria area were predicted at a balmy 70 degrees and the sun will shine through most of the day with a few cloudy periods.

NEAR RECORD

The weather outlook was one of three major indicators pointing towards a near-record percentage vote in British Columbia, but there are two factors pointing to a reversal of this trend.

Pointing to a heavy vote, perhaps as heavy as the record 72 per cent of all eligible voters who cast ballots in 1949, were unusually heavy returns at advance polls and the record number of candidates across the province.

LACK OF ISSUES

Indicating an average turnout of around 60 per cent were the average crowds which have attended the 1960 campaign's election meetings and the lack of what observers feel are strong partisan issues.

Of all the factors, the weather outlook and the 230 candidates representing five parties and including five independents are generally regarded as the most significant.

Most observers are predicting a record number of voters will turn out, but they do not feel they will be sufficient to upset the 1949 percentage record.

WANING DAYS

In the waning days of the campaign the major issue between the two parties which held the largest number of seats in the last legislature—Social Credit with 38, the CCF with 10—became free enterprise versus socialism.

Socreds were warning that a vote for either Liberals or Conservatives simply strengthened the CCF's hand and on a slightly more subdued scale the CCF was saying that a vote for the two old-line parties strengthened the Socreds.

REASON TO HOPE

Many observers agreed that the Socreds and the CCF are the only two parties with any reason to hope they will form the next government and the next official opposition, but leaders of the Liberals and Conservatives said they see a resurgence of interest in their parties and hoped for an upset similar to that which put the Tories in power at Ottawa in 1957.

Few people foresaw that victory and fewer were predicting

Guest Bid Premature
Says Shocked Pearkes

By TERRY HAMMOND

Defence Minister George Pearkes last night expressed shocked surprise that a former Diefenbaker aide has made a bid to win the Conservative nomination in his home riding of Esquimalt-Saanich.

In a long-distance telephone with the Colonist from Ottawa he immediately dispelled any possibility that he was backing the prime minister's former executive assistant, Vancouver lawyer Gowan Guest, for his seat in parliament.

"I have not resigned," thundered the veteran Conservative and long-suffering defence minister, "I would say this is a little premature."

EXCLUSIVE STORY

He was commenting on an exclusive Colonist news story which bared the text of a letter written by Mr. Guest to key Conservatives in Mr. Pearkes' riding.

"I expect to finish out my term," he said in reference to reports that he would soon quit his cabinet post to become B.C.'s lieutenant-governor.

KEPT SECRET

His request in the letter that its contents be kept secret drew a chortle from the defence minister and the dry observation "he doesn't seem to have been very successful in keeping the matter confidential."

He said that if he did resign his seat he would not "interfere in any way" with the normal constituency process of finding a successor.

But he termed resignation unlikely and said that although he had made it plain he would probably not seek another term in parliament "I am not closing the door."

CABINET SHUFFLE

Asked to comment on a report in a Vancouver newspaper that his appointment as lieutenant-governor of B.C. was to be announced next week simultaneously with a cabinet shuffle at Ottawa he replied hotly, "I don't think it would be possible to announce it without having first secured my consent."

He said he had not been asked for his consent and that he had no information on any cabinet changes.

In Ottawa yesterday it was being predicted that the Guest letter published by the Colonist might be enough to postpone any action on Mr. Pearkes' retirement.

The defence minister, who has carried perhaps the heaviest burden in the Diefenbaker government, has been the central figure in a year of reports and rumors of impending cabinet changes.

West Will Be Outvoted
At UN Say Russians

MOSCOW (AP)—Pravda has forecast a time when the west will be consistently outvoted at the United Nations. It expressed confidence that sooner or later the west will lose what the communists have long assailed as its "mechanical majority."

The Communist Party newspaper published a front-page editorial on the balance within the UN as Premier Khrushchev sailed toward New York for the UN General Assembly opening Sept. 20.

Polls Open 8 to 8

Tomorrow's the Day When B.C. Decides

British Columbia voters will have their say tomorrow in the 12 hours between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. when polls will be open to record votes in the provincial election.

First indication of results will come from returning offices about 8.30 p.m., but it will likely be about 9.30 before any trend appears.

Colonist readers are invited to telephone EV 3-4111 for the latest figures. Full details will be published in Tuesday morning's edition of The Daily Colonist.

In multiple ridings, such as Victoria, which has three seats in the legislature, voters should mark an "X" against three of the 12 names. Votes do not have to be cast for candidates belonging to any one party.

In single-seat ridings, as most ridings are, voters should put an "X" against only one name.

All liquor stores in the province will be closed all day tomorrow. All other liquor outlets will be closed between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m.

In the following lists of candidates, incumbents' names are in black-faced type.

By JACK FRY

An angry mob almost took the law into its own hands when two teenagers were arrested yesterday after a stolen car nearly ran down two children playing on Uganda Avenue by Gorge Park.

"If I had a gun I'd kill you," shouted an unidentified man to a 17-year-old driver as police were handcuffing him and his 16-year-old companion. "You know you almost killed two children."

OUT OF CONTROL

Police said the stolen, black 1949 Ford careened out of control for the last five blocks of the chase, going from one side of the road to the other and striking the curb "a good dozen times" and that several times it cut in front of the police car trying to pass it.

Two youths were captured at 5:30 p.m. on Gosper Crescent where their car was hemmed in on one side by the police car and on the other by a private car driven by a naval petty officer.

A crowd quickly formed around the group and the man who threatened to kill the driver ran up from the direction of Uganda, said an eyewitness, 14-year-old Gail Marshall of 1040 Tillicum.

GRABBED DRIVER

The navy man grabbed the driver by the neck of his jacket and slapped him across the face, then he shook him," said Miss Marshall.

"They sure had some angry people in that crowd," said Const. Bob Peterson of the Saanich police force.

On nearby Uganda, 14-year-old Bobby Painton, 1037 Tillicum, who was playing with about 10 other children in the middle of the block, said that three-year-old Dale Robertson, 305 Uganda, and four-year-old Laurel Duncan, of the same address, were in the boulevard when the car struck the curb in front of them.

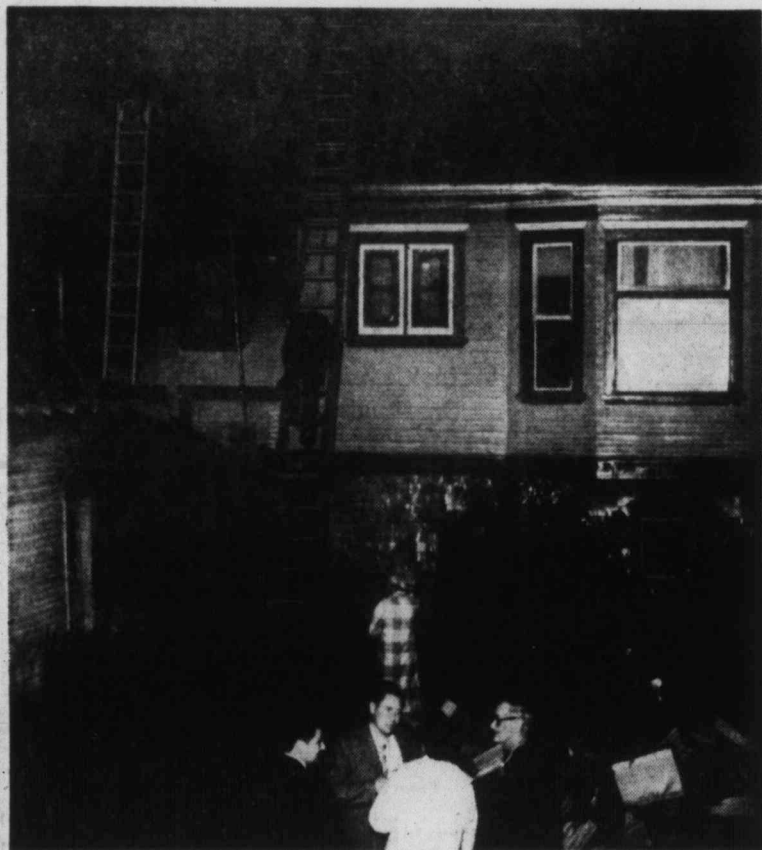

Neither the little boy nor the freckle-faced, red-haired girl seemed to realize how close they had come to death.

STOLEN CAR REPORT

Const. Peterson, who was alone in the police car, said: "I had to keep that siren going to warn people to get out of the way."

He said it started from a stolen car report broadcast by city police. A navy shore patrol vehicle sighted the car on Craigflower, but lost it in traffic, and a navy chief in his own car gave chase when the stolen car doubled back on Craigflower.

Const. Peterson, closing in from Tillicum, met the two cars head-on, made a U-turn, and gave chase. The navy man, unable to follow a quick right turn onto Selkirk from Tillicum, was waiting by Gosper Crescent when the stolen car and police car roared along Uganda, McNaughton and back onto Tillicum toward Gosper Crescent.

Children, Matches Suspect In House Blaze on Burnside

Children playing with matches apparently were the cause of a fire last night which jumped from an abandoned shed to a two-storey, older home at 32 Burnside West.

Estimate of damage was not immediately known. A glow in the sky from leap flames attracted hundreds of spectators from nearby Douglas, Cloverdale and Gorge areas.

Fire-trucks from both the city and Saanich responded to calls which came in from a street corner box and by telephone.

Tenants Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Ramage were eating their supper and their three children, Rosalind, 9, Steven, 5, and Ian, 7, were outside playing.

"Ian ran in and shouted 'the shed is on fire,'" said Mrs. Ramage. "I dialed the operator to call the fire department."

Fire which started in a corner of an oil-soaked, wooden shed formerly used as a machine shop, at the front of the property, quickly engulfed one corner of the home, which was about eight feet away.

"We've told the kids from around here to stop playing in the shed but they don't listen," said Mrs. Ramage. "Ian was playing with some other children. He was in there (the shed) but he didn't do it."

A neighbor said that shortly before the fire broke out he saw three young children using matches to set alight grass on the boulevard outside his home. He said he warned the children not to play with matches.

Mrs. Martha Crowe, 3161 Millgrove, who jointly owns the property with her brother, Victor Green of San Pedro Avenue, was on the scene while firemen were still battling the blaze. She said she did not know the value of the property.

Election Notebook

Cliche-Filled Bathtub Brims with Promise

RECEIVED AND FILED: Out Metehosin way, alongside one of those community groups of rural letter boxes, stands a big, white bathtub. Residents found a useful purpose for it.

As each new batch of election propaganda was delivered to the letter boxes so each recipient neatly stacked it in the bathtub. The tub is now full.

BIG SCENE: Traffic jam almost snarled up Yates Street last night as hordes of Liberals gathered outside their campaign headquarters prior to a blitz on city homes to urge all people out to vote.

George Gregory kept up a running count. "Here comes number 248, and here's 249, and now we're dispatching number 250..." as more and more canvassers gathered.

Some were said to have covered up to 100 houses apiece.

Later most of the canvassers

gathered at "The Scene" where George Gregory was given a surprise birthday party.

Number of candles on the cake: one.

ROYAL MAIL: Oak Bay Social Credit campaign manager A. C. McFadyen went through his group's mailing list yesterday and found that Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth has been sent a complete set of election campaign pamphlets.

"They were sent out inadvertently by our secretary," said Mr. McFadyen.

FIRE FIGHTERS: Two Liberal canvassers out on the Grits' Blitz last night had a field day among the large crowd which gathered to watch a fire on Burnside. As the flames roared, the canvassers rushed around pressing pamphlets into the hands of all present.

NO HOFFA SHE: Victoria CCF candidate Mrs. Rhoda Erickson said last night she had received an awful lot of telephone calls accusing her of being a labor boss.

"I'd just like to say I've never been in any smoke-filled rooms, I don't smoke cigars, I don't chew snuff and I don't try to frighten people with boogies behind every dark corner," said Mrs. Erickson. "And that comes from all five-foot-one of me."

PREMATURE: The afternoon newspaper matter-of-factly "did away" with Walter Campbell—husband of CCF candidate Mrs. May Campbell yesterday.

As the same newspaper is fond of saying: "The late" reference came too early. Another death highly exaggerated. "They've been vainly trying to kill us off throughout the campaign," said Mrs. Campbell. "Walter was out fishing yesterday... he's very much alive and will be for many years to come."

RENTALS UNLIMITED: Clifford A. Scotton, assistant director of public relations for the Canadian Labor Congress, is on loan to the B.C. Federation of Labor for the election campaign.

He told a CCF rally here this week that he's been home to Ottawa for two days in the past 11 weeks, and cracked: "I'm a disposable object, to be loaned out where ever I'm needed, but my wife thinks I'm a dispensable object."

BOOSTER SHOT: Esquimalt Conservative candidate James Bryant took heart yesterday from a report about the B.C. election in the Toronto Daily Star.

Not unnaturally, The Star predicted Mr. Bryant would win his seat.

SIGN LANGUAGE: All the campaign posters will have to be removed during the next week or so, including these spotted yesterday.

Opposite the home of Sacred candidate J. Donald Smith on Fairfield pictures of Works Minister W. N. Chant, Waldo Skillings and himself are tacked onto a tree trunk—right underneath a huge "For Sale" sign.

Every little assistance helps the cause, according to the CCF point of view. On Robertson Street a house has "Vote CCF" posters plastered on the front windows.

CARRIED AWAY: One of the silliest charges levelled against the government was that thrown by Victoria Liberal campaign manager David Hummel last night. He said the Socreds did not believe in democracy as "they have effectively disenfranchised between 10 and 40 per cent of the Victoria City electorate by not ensuring that the voters' lists were reasonably up to date before calling a long-planned but short-notice election."

Truth of the matter is that extensive enumerating was conducted at the beginning of the year, and those missed had ample opportunity to get their names on the roll. Some were undoubtedly missed but the situation today is a thousand times better than the shambles which occurred in 1956.

Election Combat Over

By TERRY HAMMOND

British Columbia's least-colorful postwar election campaign shuddered to a far-from reluctant halt last night with party officials in hand-to-hand combat with their most tangible problem to date—how to get out the women's vote on washday.

Affairs of state were suddenly subordinated to the scheduling of free transportation for the party faithful.

Men accustomed to dealing in the political future suddenly found themselves confronted with the domestic present.

MRS. AVERAGE HOUSEWIFE

The question of whether the Columbia should come first was forced to take a back seat to the question of whether Mrs. Average Housewife should come first.

Everybody agreed that she should, but her problems were manifold.

The morning would be taken up with the washing and after, lunch there would be the ironing and sometime between 3 and 4 o'clock the children would be coming home from school, hungry, and supper was at five or six.

Could she get a free ride to the polls, do a little shopping (there's ALWAYS time for shopping) and still get a free ride home?

Well, yes, she could.

AIDED AND ABETTED

The enthusiasm and ingenuity which invariably goes into this typical election transportation complex seems never to be diminished by the probability that for every supporter carried to the polls in the chosen chariots at least three supporters of opposing parties are similarly aided and abetted.

Party headquarters officials sat in knots jostling down, first, the names of their relatives with cars, the names of near-relatives with cars, friends with cars, acquaintances of friends with cars. Still, towards 7 p.m. on Monday, there won't be nearly enough cars.

Party workers, (distinguished from party officials by the fact that they actually work) were preparing statistic sheets.

ANY GIVEN TIME

Statistic sheets are designed to show at any given time on Monday who in the constituency has voted and who has not. Known supporters are usually ticked with a colored pencil to make sure they get to the poll at any rate.

Statistic sheets being what they are (fairly reliable until noon, fairly unreliable until five, truly unreliable until seven and a thorough mess before eight) many known supporters will be telephoned seven times by at least four different people to make sure they have cast their ballots.

Scrutineers were getting last-minute briefing and not quite understanding them.

Relays of runners were being signed on to get polling station information back to headquarters in the full realization that no matter how fast they run someone will have phoned it there before them.

HAM AND EGG

Wives of party workers (and even some wives of party officials) were deciding what to put into the ham and devilled egg sandwiches which invariably find their way into party headquarters on election nights.

And of course, there would be coffee, gallons of it. Not very good coffee—the cream will run out about 8:30 but hot, lip-blistering hot, in thick mugs.

Tomorrow the rough-hewn platforms of the 1960 election will be forgotten and the talk around headquarters will not be so much what you stand for but whom you know.

"How about this guy?" somebody will ask pointing to a name on the voters' list "anyone know him?"

SPEED TO HIS HOME

Four limousines will speed to his home only to find he voted on his way to work.

By 11 p.m. the wishes of the electorate will be known it. Not most ridings, many old problems will be resolved and some new ones will be created.

And among the new ones will be what to do with several dozen devilled egg sandwiches only slightly curled around the edges.

Canada Safeway, ever conscious of the expansion and growth of British Columbia's expanding economy and thriving communities, continue to invest millions of dollars each year in the remodelling of existing stores, building new de luxe stores and purchasing the necessary equipment.

The third new store in 1960 opens this week in Richmond, and there are at present nine new stores in the various stages of construction. Many other new stores are already on the drawing boards.

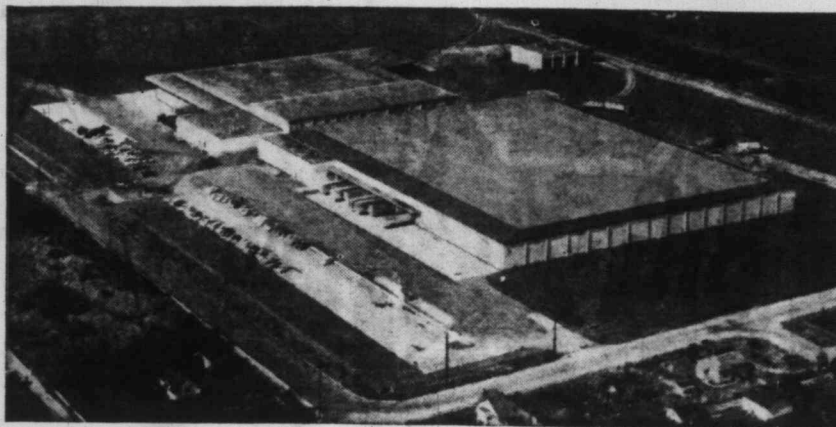

Safeway representatives are continually looking for potential sites in communities in which Safeway is already located and also in areas not yet serviced by Safeway.

Serviced by the Largest Food Distribution Centre in Western Canada

Safeway stores in British Columbia are serviced by the largest food distribution centre in Western Canada. This centre consists of a Grocery Warehouse of approximately 4 acres, and a perishable foods warehouse for produce, frozen foods, cheese and margarine etc., The new ultra-modern Empress Manufacturing plant is also located at the site of the distribution centre.

Safeway also operates a dairy, a bakery, a tea and coffee plant, and ice cream plant in Vancouver, and a grocery warehouse in Victoria.

In addition, Safeway fleet of over 40 trucks and trailer units have travelled nearly a total of 450,000 miles since the first of the year, serving the 74 stores, and hauling produce, raw materials and manufactured goods to the plants and warehouses.

CNIB OPENS NEW DOORS

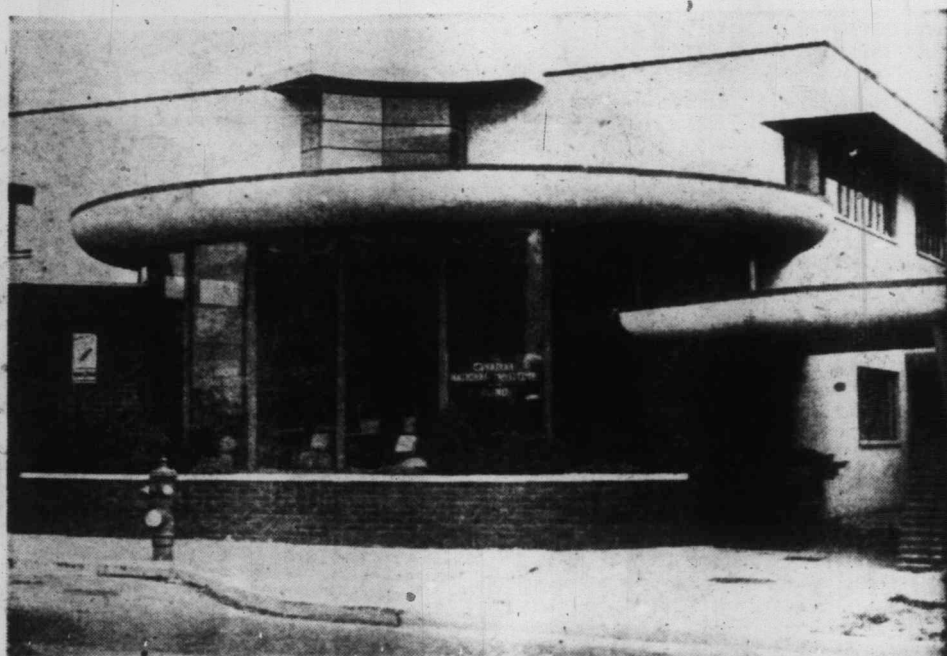

DURING the hockey and lacrosse seasons, literally thousands of people, on their way to the Memorial Arena, pass these doors. They see a very modern, very neat building, with green shrubs in planters. Their eyes pass by the gold letters on the glass. And of all the people who pass by—not uncaring, of course, just otherwise occupied and unaware—perhaps one in a hundred knows the work and effort and accomplishment that takes place inside. I was one of the ninety-nine, until yesterday.

I was early for my appointment with Miss Gloria Mortimore, young field secretary of the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, and as I was told I might poke about, that's what I did. The place is as shiny as a new dollar.

The area fronting on Blanshard Street is shop and offices. Displayed on shelves, counters, and in the showcases, is the work done by the blind, much of it made here on the premises, a good deal of it in the workers' own homes. And the perfection of it illustrates to a remarkable degree the development that is possible in the sense of touch.

There are baskets of every imaginable kind and for every possible use. There are wicker cradles, finely made rush-bottomed chairs and seats. There is a variety of leather work. There are bedroom slippers and dolls made from foam rubber, with the dolls' dresses petalled like flowers and trimmed with exactitude in bright sequins. There are articles woven by hand, and machine-stitched, and there is tile work.

All these things are for sale, of course. But they are priced only to cover the cost of the materials and to give the maker a small remuneration for his time, no more. The institute is strictly a non-profit organization. Occupational therapy is the real idea behind the shop.

Down a short hall is a comfortable lounge, nicely furnished in maple. It has fireplace, record player and radio. And along a little farther is a good-sized auditorium, with stage, public address system, piano. A smart kitchen has all modern equipment and serving hatches.

Miss Mortimore, when I presently met her, surprised me. She is young, tall, and friendly, and for a moment I didn't realize that she herself is one of those for whom the institute was founded. She didn't mind telling me about herself. She has been blind since she was five. She is from Toronto, worked for her BA at McMaster University in Hamilton, and got her BSW at the Toronto School of Social Work. She has been field secretary for Vancouver Island for about a year, and she loves it.

The phone rang while we talked. She answered it, hung up, said "Oh, I mustn't forget to make a note of that number," and picked up a little metal punch. There was a strip of metal on heavy paper before her on the desk, set with rows of slots. Working backwards, as it were, from right to left, she punched some fast holes in the slots, and then turned the paper over to show me the raised Braille. There is also, she explained, the "Moon" system of reading for the blind, which consists of a sort of shorthand in raised characters, with a curve, also raised.

SIX MONTHS' COURSE

Thus, the fingers may follow from the end of one line to the beginning of the next, which is immediately below, thus lessening the chance of a reader losing his place. It takes about six months to become proficient in this.

Miss Mortimore is the only member of the Victoria staff, although this office works in close conjunction with that of Vancouver, and specialists from the Mainland come over when needed, including a preschool worker whose field is the assistance of parents with blind children.

Asked what is the first step when sightless people, or their families, come to the institute for help, Miss Mortimore said: "We go very slowly. The social case work comes first of all, which means that, taking into consideration age, physical condition and general attitude, we try to find the best approach. Because some people are very shy, at first they prefer to work alone; but if we can get them into classes for Braille, and the various handicrafts, group therapy has the best results. They encourage each other enormously."

She cited the case of an elderly woman newly-arrived from the Prairies to live with a daughter in Duncan, where Miss Mortimore has classes every fortnight. The woman had just a flicker of dim vision left, but was lonely, unhappy, lost. Presently, albeit reluctantly, she agreed to join the classes—and found to her surprise and pleasure that she was infinitely better with her hands than she had supposed. In fact, she was better than her classmates, so that in a short time she was helping them, and correcting their mistakes. A year did wonders for her self-confidence and her attitude toward her handicap. Now she is able to make artificial flowers, jewelry, etc., and even helps about the house to a point which leaves the daughter free to take a job.

In Victoria there are about 240 blind, some of whom have up to 30 per cent vision. There are about 80 in the well-known White Cam Club. And they have an active recreational program. With specially marked cards they manage lively cribbage and other tournaments in the lounge. Every day during the winter there is something going on in the auditorium—lectures, concerts, dances.

HOLIDAYS AT SOOKE

Square dances, in particular, have proved successful and popular, and these have been immensely assisted by Sid Smethurst, the professional caller, and his crew, the "Tumbleweeds," who provide a sighted partner for each blind dancer. There are swimming classes at the Crystal Garden. A bowling league, with a sighted coach, takes on other teams. Always there are special Christmas parties. And in the summer some 30 of the blind spend about 10 days at the camp at Sooke, which is run by the Family and Children's Social Service.

The institute itself is financed by public funds through the Community Chest, and by occasional bequests, and government grants. There is a blind allowance for the individual who must qualify for it by the same means test as is required for old-age assistance, and there is a bonus available if the person is actually destitute. The pension is a federal one, administered by the province.

In due course, Miss Mortimore took me upstairs—where a swinging barrier across the top guards against accidents—and turned me over to John Brydon, the factory foreman. At a long table in the spacious workshop, several people were seated.

SURE FINGERS

They were making those little wooden and wicker baskets used by restaurants for soda crackers; and I watched, intrigued to notice that it was as though the sure, busy fingers had seeing eyes, even if their owners didn't.

And I found that there are endless jobs done in that room, at which the average person would never guess.

Last spring they turned out 18,000 nursery baskets for seedlings, together with the flats that held four baskets each.

They insert the fancy ribbons in small gift cards such as are supplied by caterers.

They attach the strings to the price tags used by stores for their merchandise.

AID TO STORES

When a shipment of small goods imported from the States arrived inadequately marked, the blind workers stamped them all with the necessary "Made in U.S.A."

And now that department stores and stationers have taken to selling the equipment needed in the schools already packaged for pupils according to grade, these people do the packaging:—one ruler, two pencils, one eraser, one box of crayons, four exercise books, and so on—in transparent plastic containers, marked with the grade number.

RIGHT MAN THERE

Mr. Brydon is obviously that rare and very useful type, the right man in the right place! He has his own workshop on the premises, and if he needs something he hasn't got, to enable people without sight to do a job, he merely invents it—and then builds it!

For instance—the string for price tags. No time-wasting, laborious fumbling in sad darkness for the holes. Instead, part of the wire from a coat-hanger has been straightened out and fastened to the edge of a work-table.

The other end has been nicked to form a tiny hook—like a crochet hook. Half a hundred price tags are threaded by their holes onto this. The strings are cut to the right length. So we catch the centre of a string in the hook, bring the card up over it, catch the loop of string of the hook, flip the two ends through it, and there you are!

Again—an order came along to package two slices of bread each in little cellophane bags, and staple them to an advertising card. I gathered it was a bakery project to publicize its product. The trick was, of course, that the bread must not be touched by hand. So, after some cogitation, Mr. Brydon came up with what looks like a rimless wheel—only the spokes are flat, the width of a slice of bread, and end in a sort of little metal slide over which the cellophane bags fitted. Then the sliced bread, still unhandled was set in the centre; somebody turned the wheel, the slices slid down into the bags, which were slipped off and passed to the party with card and stapler—and another spoke came round!

SOLVED PROBLEMS

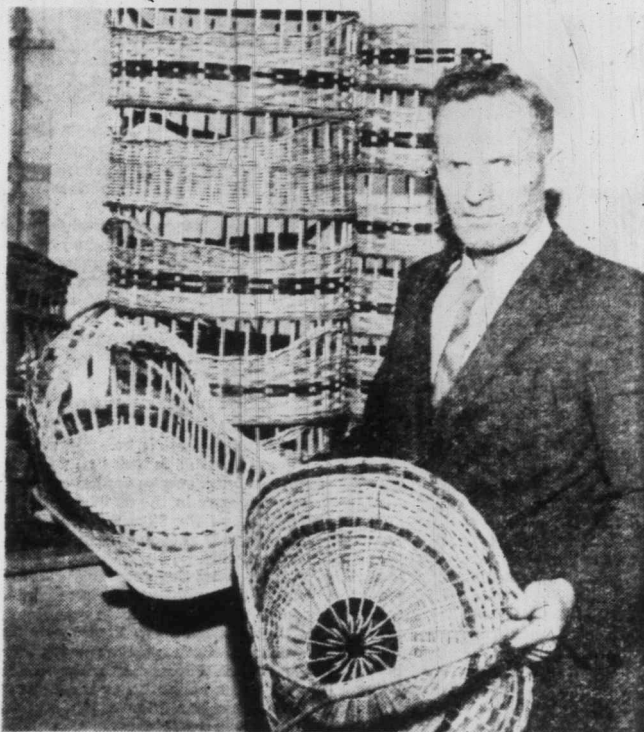

And again one of the most popular baskets—and these things sell all up and down the Island—is a round, rather flat job, about 22 inches in diameter, with a handle. Nice for the housewife gathering her cut flowers in the garden, or even to carry kindling for the fireplace. The problem was that these are woven from the centre, which means too-close, too-tight weaving for sightless workers. Mr. Brydon simply substituted a centre of wood, a flat disc about four inches across, with holes from which to start the wicker—and from there on the basket-maker has no trouble.

LOW-COST HOMES

So much for the building on Blanshard Street. Two years ago the institute opened a low-cost housing block at 950 Humboldt Street for its people, and today the 10 double units and four single ones are all occupied. The group of buildings was designed by architect Charles E. Craig, and the whole layout is both charming and intensely practical. "And probably less than 10 per cent of the people of Victoria know that we are here," said Charles Edwards, the caretaker.

I was fortunate to find him home. He and his wife manage "CNIB Villas," and obviously do a first-rate job. Everything is as neat as a button.

Amid a blaze of flowers, the units rise in tiers, serviced both by wide steps, carefully railed, and by easy ramps. Each row of buildings is on level ground, and the cement walks throughout are marked with roughened, pebbly squares set at strategic points, so that a sightless walker may know exactly where he is. At each corner, at the foot and the top of each set of stairs, and in front of each apartment door, one of these rough patches conveys its message to feet moving in darkness.

At the back of each row, trim outdoor lockers, with sliding doors, come out at right angles from the building.

These house garden chairs, cleaning utensils, garbage cans and give privacy to the little patios between the back doors. Louvered screens at corners are windbreaks. There are cherry, apple and plum trees. And the flowers are magnificent.

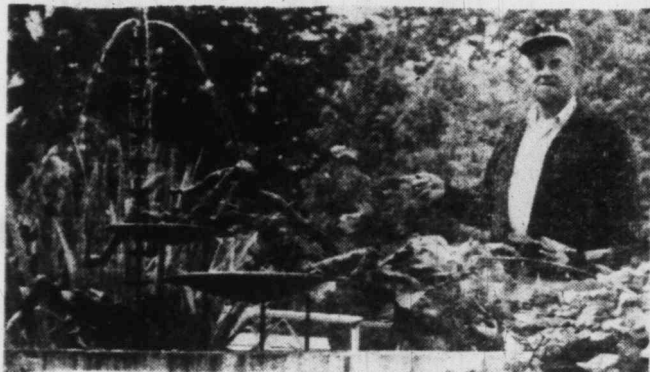

I was sad that the tenants could not see these. "Never mind," said my genial guide, "they enjoy knowing the blooms are there, and they love to have their visitors admire the garden." He seemed not to consider himself anything special in the way of a gardener, but this could only have been modesty. Double petunias, African marigolds, geraniums are profuse and enormous; there were dozens of varieties of dahlias, and some of them are the size of dinner plates.

The beds line walks and walls, and are blocked off by cement brick to a height of some two feet, so that there shall be no missteps. Lawns are green and tailored, and the garden benches have hinged covers for cleanliness—lift these up, lean them against the back rests, and both seat and back are unsullied from dust and weather.

TUNEFUL FOUNTAIN

Almost the first thing that caught my eye here was a unique and delightful little fountain. Donated by the Municipal Chapter of the IOOE, says a little bronze plaque. From a wrought-iron upright the water splashes into a series of saucers of varying size, thence into a pool, out again over a wide lip into a second pool, and drops finally into the lowest one, the falls being of different heights. You realize immediately why it's been designed thus. It's for sound effects. The people who live in these attractive, well-planned villas may not be able to see their fountain, but it's a joyous thing to listen to!

So I said thank you, and good-bye, and I went away. And I thought, blindness is a lonely and a frightening thing. A little death. And sometimes this is a pretty poisonous world. So it's good that there are people who design fountains for other people who can't see them. I bet it helps.

THE IOOE FOUNTAIN AT CNIB VILLAS plays tunes as the water falls. Beside the fountain is Charles Edwards, caretaker.

DREAM COMING TRUE FOR NORTHERN VANCOUVER ISLAND

Ferry First, Then Road

The northern half of Vancouver Island, with a population of 15,000 persons scattered in several communities, is bubbling over with enthusiasm and anticipation of a road connection with the rest of Vancouver Island.

A new ferry service, operated by Murray Marine Services, with the Mv Uchuk III—which can carry 100 passengers and seven cars—has already bridged the gap with 4½-hour trips on Fridays, Sundays, Mondays and Tuesdays over the 65-mile route from Kelsey Bay, Beaver Cove, Port McNeill, Alert Bay and Sointula. On Wednesdays the ferry makes side trips to "the jungle," local name for the maze of islands in Johnstone Strait between Kelsey Bay and Port Hardy. "We are pleased with the service, but we need a bigger ferry for cars," says G. K. (Paddy) Storey, president of the Port Hardy and District Board of Trade.

LINKS NEEDED

The ferry service is a stop-gap measure until roads are completed along the 282-mile length of Vancouver Island. The Island Highway now goes 220 miles to Kelsey Bay. There is already a network of nearly 400 miles of roads built by logging companies in the north Island area, and within five years it is expected these will be connected, either by the logging companies concerned—Rayonier of Canada, Canadian Forest Products, Crown Zellerbach, and MacMillan, Bloedel & Powell River—or by the provincial highways department, to provide the complete Island-long road and several across-Island roads.

Rayonier last week brought in highway building machinery to complete pushing through a road from its logging headquarters at Port McNeill to its pulp mill at Port Alice. This will become a public road and there already is a 21-mile public road from Port Hardy to Port McNeill.

250 HAVE CARS

Rayonier already has 200 miles of logging roads in the north Island and company employees have more than 250 cars in the district, which they use on the Port McNeill-Port Hardy road, and on logging roads on weekends.

Next year the provincial highways department and logging companies will co-operate to complete a 15-mile road from Port McNeill to Beaver Cove at the mouth of the Kokish River. A bridge that will have to be built over the Nimpkish River has been a big stumbling block to this project, which will then see the road from the north completed to the halfway mark.

Then, if an inland route is taken, as expected, only about 26 miles of road will be needed to complete the road to Kelsey Bay, via Bonanza Lake and Schoen Lake.

Canadian Forest Products, which recently won a forest management licence in the middle north of Vancouver Island in the Nimpkish country, has a tremendous construction program under way which includes plans for 25 miles of new road each year for the next five years.

"Within the next five years we will probably connect with Tahsis and Gold River," says Russell Mills, logging superintendent for Canadian Forest Products in the Nimpkish area. That road, although much longer, would give some access to the fabulous Gold River country on the west coast, which may now be reached by the Campbell River-Gold River logging road which at present is banned to public use by the logging companies which built it.

Canadian Forest Products has an intricate road and railway network in the Nimpkish country, which includes the largest private railway system in Canada.

Within the last one or two years, logging companies which have not previously been receptive to north Island development, have had a change of heart.

"We now feel it is to our advantage to have people move in here," says Bob Hallgren, logging superintendent for Rayonier at Port McNeill.

His company is so anxious to see north Island settlement that, as a start, it plans to sell 160 large lots of land in a waterfront area, just three miles north of the Port McNeill company headquarters. These lots will be placed on the general market, not just for company employees, and should see the start of a new community. It is likely another area will be opened to the public in the Port Alice vicinity.

COMPANIES HOLD ALL

That is the only way the general public will get in on the northland development. Every acre north of Kelsey Bay is either controlled by logging companies, or under provincial forest reserve.

In recent years the provincial recreation department has made a number of recreation reserves on land in the area. A government committee is now working out a plan for orderly development of north Island country, and this will undoubtedly provide for the release of some land for development of new communities.

Main industries of the north Island district are logging, fishing and iron and copper mining.

Alert Bay, which bills itself as the "Hub of the North," is the main population centre with 1,500 people, nearly half of them Indians of the Nimpkish band.

Alert Bay is on Cormorant Island, one mile from Vancouver Island, and nearly everyone has a waterfront home. There are 200 cars and less than eight miles of road, which is now being blacktopped.

GREAT FISH CENTRE

Some 900 fishermen operate from Alert Bay, which supplies 25 per cent of the salmon industry of British Columbia and one-third of the clam supply.

Port Hardy, which is the only other big private settlement in the north Island area, has a population of around 1,200, and has hotel accommodation and an airport. Port McNeill, a Rayonier company town, has a population of about 500 and Sointula, a Finnish fishing settlement on Malcolm Island, across from Port McNeill, has a population of about 800. The Kokish Camp of Crown Zellerbach, on the east coast below Nimpkish River, has about 25 families, and there is a small population at Telegraph Cove where there is a small logging operation.

Consolidated Mining and Smelting, which has taken over the Empire mines, will start building a mining road in the district back of Port McNeill within two weeks and it is expected a community of 300 people will build up around a copper mining operation.

Not only the white population is pushing for north Island development. "I think it is wonderful the things they say about us . . . and I think it is time we got our road," Nimpkish Indian Chief Jimmy Sewid told a liaison group of Vancouver Island civic and community leaders recently.

DEBT-LADEN CANADA SCARES OTTAWA

Our Economy Rides On Credit Buying

By ALLAN ANDERSON

Mr. Average Canadian is in the hole to the tune of about $2,500—and he's going deeper in debt all the time. That may cheer the finance companies, but it's got the government worried stiff.

Here's how it works, according to official Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures:

If you've got a car, chances are you haven't finished paying for it.

If you own your own home, chances are there's a mortgage outstanding.

If you have a life insurance policy, chances are you've borrowed money on it.

And if this doesn't apply to you—chances are it does apply to the man next door.

The extent of Canadian indebtedness varies according to the sets of figures you're using.

Consumer debt includes charge accounts and installment buying debts, loans from small loan firms and credit unions, and secured bank loans.

National in-the-red average, according to the latest figures, is only $301. But only 49 per cent of the population is covered by this category—so the average for those who actually have the debts is $619.

Then there's the wider category of indebtedness, which includes consumer debts and adds to that mortgages, debts owed to individuals, secured bank loans, and such miscellanea as doctors' bills.

And here 60 per cent of Canada's population have some debts—and they owe an average of $2,782. That's the figure that has the government economists scared stiff.

Why? Partly because it dribbles away money which could go into investment, partly because it contains the seeds of inflation—and partly just because it's all so unprecedented that they don't quite know where it will end.

They're not quite sure either, whether it should end. Credit buying may mean nobody actually owns the things they're surrounded by—but it also means the goods do get sold, the factories do keep running, the jobs are available.

Take away credit buying, and what happens? Maybe the whole economy crashes. Let credit go hog-wild—and maybe the economy crashes that way—too.

The consumers have their own worries about it. However carefree you may be, when you get saddled with that $2,782 worth of debts you just can't help worrying about getting it all paid off.

Down in California, they've started a different kind of consumers' movement which treats credit buying as a kind of temporary insanity.

In San Francisco, a group of chronically debt-ridden families banded together in what they call "Charge Accounts Anonymous," treating credit buying as a compulsion which needs the Alcoholics Anonymous kind of treatment.

They follow suggestions published by Dr. C. Knight

Aldrich, a research sociologist, who concluded that "credit drunks" are so sick mentally that most of them actually enjoy being in debt.

It gives them the childish feeling of being set at liberty in a toy department with a pocketful of money. It makes them a centre of attention—and even the pay-up-or-else letters they get give them that "somebody needs me" feeling.

The catch-'em-young campaign of some big stores which encouraged teen-age charge accounts is blamed for some of this inability to handle money in later years.

Earl B. Schwulst, president of the Bowery Savings Bank, New York, said: "I think this is something like teaching the young to use narcotics—I think it's very bad, very bad indeed."

But in spite of Charge Accounts Anonymous credit buying is here to stay—if only because the economy is geared to produce far more than consumers can possibly pay for in straight cash.

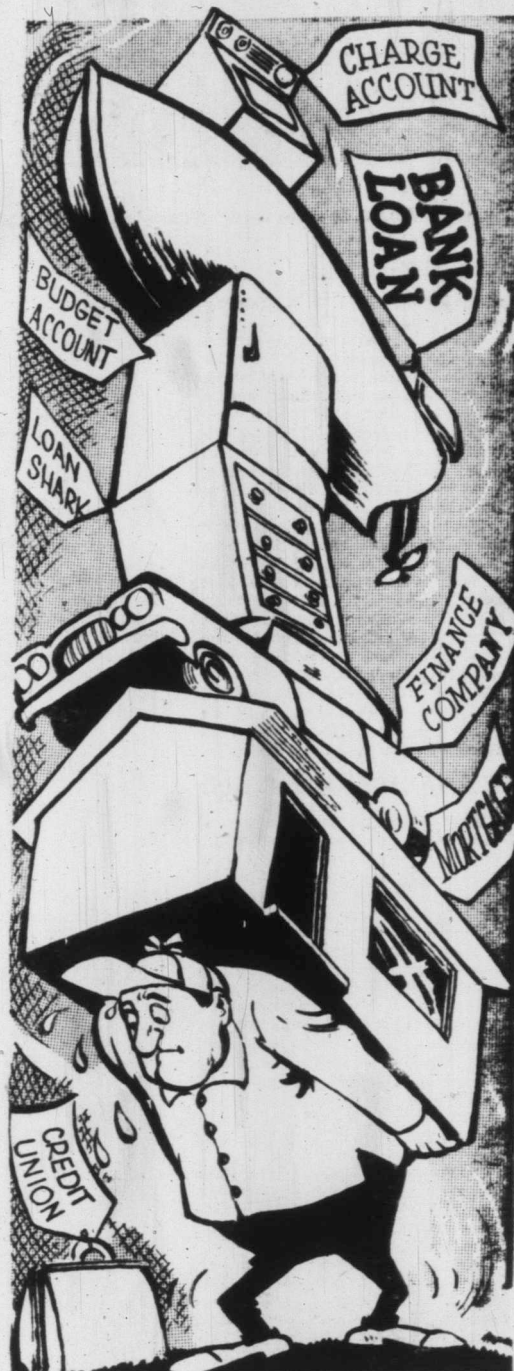

"Credit has become a North American way of life, and it will certainly become increasingly more so in the Sixties," says Cyrus H. Adams, a Chicago department store executive.

"It is a major and vital part of department store business, and we will continue to push it aggressively."

So, to get back to that $2,782—if you're one of the 40 per cent who have no debts at all, chances are you'll accumulate your share along with the rest as time goes on.

And by the time the next Bureau of Statistics report comes out, the in-the-red figure for the debt-ridden Dominion will probably be pushing the $3,000 mark—at least.

Graceful Hands Mean Hard Work

Don't be caught cat-napping, for graceful, kitten-soft hands mean hard work. In Hollywood, most successful young singers and dancers spend hours learning to move their hands expressively. And, as ballerina Kristin Harmon discovers (above), you can learn a lot from a feline friend and a ball of yarn. Thread wool around your fingers; tautly hold hands apart, spreading and stretching digits against slight pressure of yarn. Continue to contract and expand hand movements 20 times to master co-ordination and control.

Another timely benefit which ensures handsome results is massaging from fingertips to elbow. For a satin, not sandpaper, touch, use lotion as you scribe a series of expanding circles. Kris, 15-year-old daughter of CBS radio sportscaster Tom Harmon and Mrs. Harmon, steadies arms on table top and uses a "velvet touch" technique.

If you have "puppet hands" that seem uncontrolled and awkward, concentrate on exercises that strengthen. Try squeezing rubber balls in the palm of your hands. Press firmly, then release. You'll find exercise done 10 times daily aids weak wrists and hands.

P.S. Even more expressive than hands are the eyes. If you'd like our new chart and fact sheet on Hollywood make-up tips for the eyes, send 10c and a self-addressed, unstamped envelope to "Youth Parade," care of The Daily Colonist, P.O. Box 46-181, Hollywood 46, Calif.

'BIDDIE' WON'T LET CATS FIGHT THEIR BATTLES

By ROSALIE HEYWOOD

Biddie is part cocker spaniel — twelve years old. When she first took up residence with the family she was tiny, white and short-haired. She loved to play in one of father's work boots, chewing on the laces and tongue and many times falling asleep there with only head and forepaw protruding. As she grew so did her coat. It became long and wavy but remained white.

Her dog house is on the back porch for she would not be persuaded to sleep farther from the family than that. When the back door opens, where she is, curled up in her house, her black eyes smiling inquiringly, or maybe she'll get out and stretch, waiting for an invitation indoors.

Her main purpose in life, in her opinion, is to break up cat fights and sometimes at night when strange cats nearby start their mournful yowling one to another, or begin to fight, Biddie races toward them, barking all the while. The cats scatter and Biddie, her duty done, trots back to her house, mummbling under her breath with low snorts and growls as she grumbles at her rest being so disturbed.

Strange cats are not the only ones to be put in their place. The two belonging to her family are in need of reprimanding many times; the younger, three-year-old taking advantage of the slow movements of the 14-year-old to jump on his back and bite. At the first sign of disturbance Biddie is there and the young, black cat scoots. The older one remains where he was, understanding that Biddie has rescued him and knowing full well that she would do neither cat harm. Biddie then returns to her place, smiling and wagging her tail for approval.

She spends most of her time outdoors but in the evening when the family are watching television she is permitted to spend a few hours in the living room on her own special mat. There she alerts to every foreign sound and on several occasions has to be let out to send some strange dog or cat about its business, then she returns and settles again for a peaceful nap. TV interests her not at all.

She takes objection to strange dogs going by her home but will not voice her opinion until she is safely behind the picket fence that surrounds the yard, then she barks furiously.

She has her own special dog food but for some reason known only to herself, she believes the cats' food is better. After her supper she lies on her mat, jaw resting on paws, supposedly settled for the evening but with one eye cocked in the direction of the doorway as she listens to sounds from the cats' dishes. When the cats appear one after the other, sit and begin a thorough cleaning of paws and face, Biddie, as discreetly as possible, slips out to the kitchen to see if any of the succulent cat food is left. If there is, she cleans it up, licking the dishes so hard that sometimes she sends them flying across the room.

Her one fear is of firecrackers and on Halloween the first sharp crack of fireworks sends her tearing into the house, shivering with terror, and there she remains.

She has never been permitted to follow the children or adults of the family and has grown accustomed to it, though when younger would have liked to do otherwise. Now she will follow for two blocks, no more, no less, then return to the house where she keeps a watchful eye alerted for their return. When they come into view she scampers, gleefully down the road to welcome them back.

TO TENACIOUS B.C. MARSHAL—

TRUE B.C. CRIME STORY

LERROY CANNERY FIRE

Everyone probably knows Vancouver's busy Birks corner at Georgia and Granville, but how many can point out the Vancouver block? Just south of Birks, on Granville, it's one of those thin, high, sort of wedged-in, office buildings, with a modest, almost indistinguishable entrance.

Pedestrian crowds that hurry to and fro past this doorway little realize that on an upper floor a very interesting group of people are continually examining, plotting and testing. It's the control centre for the province's unending war against a ravaging, red-tongued monster that can destroy both home and industry . . . fire!

"The Fire Marshal's Office," says the legend on the door, and it's here you will find details of inspections of theatres, schools, hospitals and lodge halls, not to speak of gasoline storage tanks, oil-burning appliances and so forth. Here the province's record of fire losses is stacked against insurance claims, and often an alert investigator seizes his hat to catch a boat, plane, train or bus to unravel a tale of skulduggery and deceit.

FIRE REPORTED

It was in one of these offices, on an afternoon in early September 1937, that Deputy Fire Marshal W. A. (Bill) Walker fingered a radio message received from a B.C. Provincial Police patrol boat 200 miles up the coast giving news that the cannery at Leroy Bay, between Cape Caution and Rivers Inlet, had been destroyed by fire. The season's operation being over, there was no loss of life or injury.

A week later a routine report followed the radiogram, giving the number and size of the buildings destroyed, the amount of insurance held, and by whom, and citing watchman Lloyd Biggs as sole witness to the blaze.

To gauge the action that followed, let's take a closer look at Fire Marshal Walker. Born in Ireland, he got his first police training at the Dublin barracks of the Royal Irish Constabulary, before serving at Tipperary and in Queen's County, which is now Leix. Later he came to Canada, to join the B.C. Police in 1924. Five years later, when he was a sergeant, he left the Provincials to become deputy fire marshal under J. A. Thomas. By 1937 he'd seen eight years of "flame chasing," during which time he'd proved himself the nemesis of many a firebug, which in turn was due to Bill Walker's strongest characteristic: tenacity.

On the face of the reports the cannery fire was a routine matter. Closed down for the season, apparently the watchman, Lloyd Biggs, had discovered the blaze too late to take effective action. Once out of control, 28 unoccupied buildings had gone up in flames, plus all the machinery. Only the wharf stuck out in the bay to mark what had once been a successful salmon cannery.

Of course if reports of this kind were merely scanned, initialled and filed, the arsonist would have a picnic. Instead, turning the form over, Walker noted a list of the insurance companies affected and to what extent. Next day a routine office check came up with a brow-knitting piece of information for Walker. Insurance on the Leroy Bay plant had been increased from $30,000 to $100,000 just two months before the fire, and 10 companies were sharing the loss.

ARSON SUSPECTED

With this bit of knowledge in the back of his head, Bill Walker flew up the coast to Leroy Bay to take a look at the property and possibly have a chat with watchman Biggs. The watchman, however, wasn't around; he'd left a day or so after the fire.

Walking around the scene of the conflagration, Walker was struck by a curious phenomena; each building had apparently burned on its own. If the fire had started at one point, figured Walker, and swept across the plant, ground and planking in the intervening spaces would have been scorched.

There were still one or two fishermen around the bay, and Walker took time out to chat with them, learning that some sort of loading operation had gone on just before the fire. A tug and scow had made a night-time visit to the plant, and by the flicker of lights some of the fishermen thought some machinery had been taken south to be repaired.

Finally, Walker added to his notebook the observation of an old Indian. He'd seen cannery owner Henry Stump arrive by plane the day after the fire and later leave, with the watchman.

Back in Vancouver Walker, more than ever anxious to have a talk with the watchman, approached Stump, who disclaimed all knowledge of Biggs' whereabouts.

"He went down to the States," said the cannery owner, "went pretty suddenly because he got word that his wife was sick. He mentioned something about California, but I don't know the town."

Walker heard the explanation with a growing sense of wariness; something was "fishy" in the cannery business, and it was something between Stump and Biggs! In the next few weeks, however, nothing further came to light to link the pair. In the first week of January, 1938, the tenacious Walker picked up something. It was just a stray lead but it led him to Tacoma. Watchman Biggs had been there all right and so had his boss, Henry Stump. Together the pair spent New Year's eve in gay abandon, making the rounds of the night spots. It was in their wake that the tall, dark and handsome Irish fire investigator talked in his persuasive brogue to bartenders and cigarette girls, occasionally peeling off a five-spot that was lost to his expense account.

JAIL FOR

Still exploring the Tacoma background, Walker found that after New Year's the pair had visited eastern Washington, ostensibly to look over a tract of farm land. From there, Biggs dropped out of sight.

Before he returned to B.C., Walker made several valuable police contacts, including the special agent in charge of the FBI's Spokane office.

A month or two passed uneventfully, then one afternoon Walker's phone rang in the Vancouver block.

It was a Tacoma sheriff, to give Walker the tip that the missing Biggs might be found in Findlay, Ohio. A wire to a Findlay police chief, enjoining secrecy, brought the answer that Lloyd Biggs was there.

Findlay, Walker found, was about 45 miles south of Toledo, and a few days later he and a friendly police chief knocked at the door of a modest bungalow on the

Her father, she said, had visited her and her mother a few days ago, then suddenly departed for some unknown destination. On his visit he never mentioned being in Canada, but spoke at times of Oklahoma.

Walker gained the idea during the visit that Biggs, who had little interest in the support of his wife and daughter, had been absent for long periods. Wife and daughter, it almost seemed, were rather relieved when his short and unexpected visit ended.

"Did he get any mail when he was here?" asked Walker, and the girl thought he had.

"Yes, he got a letter," she said, after a pause, "picked it up at general delivery downtown. It was from Oklahoma; from Tulsa. It had a money order in it... a money order for $250."

"Are you sure it was from Tulsa?" asked Walker.

"Yes," said the girl, "I saw it lying on the table. He said the money was back pay from a man he used to work for."

"Back pay," thought Walker, "could be back pay from Henry Stump!"

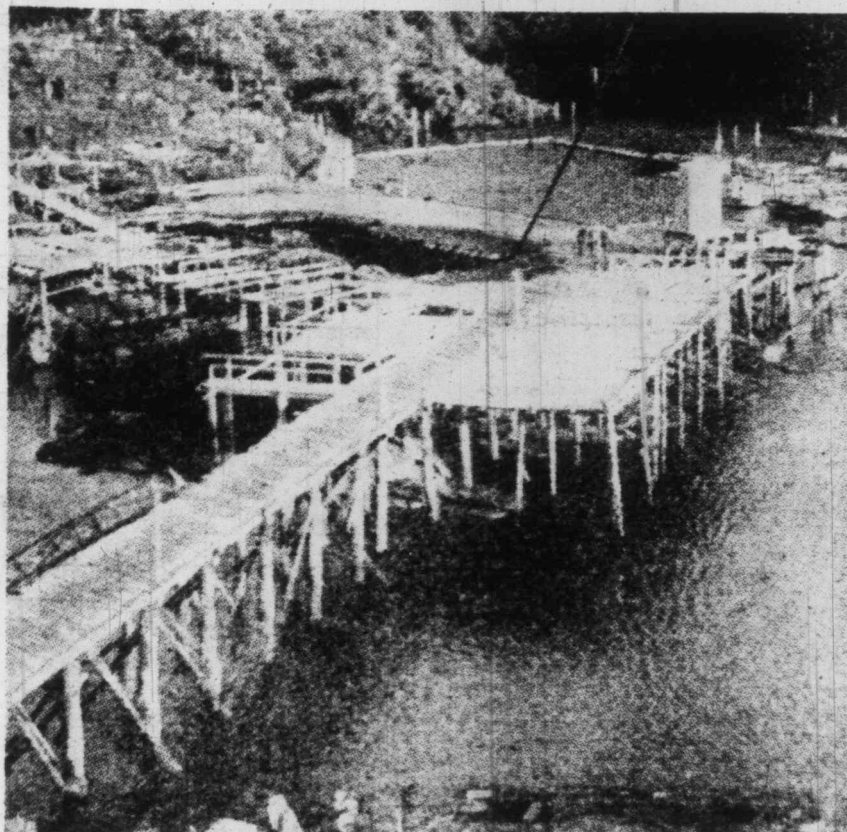

OKLAHOMA CLUE

Walker, grabbing the next train out, headed for Oklahoma.

In booming, oil-rich Tulsa, accompanied by a helpful sheriff's deputy, he made a round of the banks. He found the bank that had issued a $250 money order, payable to Lloyd Biggs of Findlay, Ohio, and found also that it was purchased by a man who had a checking account at a Seattle bank. It was enough for Walker, and once again he swung aboard a train bound for the Pacific northwest.

In Seattle he found the bank and the account, and the man who signed his cheques as Henry Wallace was identified by his picture as... Henry Stump. Just to confirm it, a check of hotel registers and Seattle-Vancouver long distance calls, gave the information that Henry Wallace was accustomed to phoning a Vancouver number... the home of Henry Stump.

Back once more in Vancouver, Walker prowled the Ladner waterfront until he found what he wanted—the boat and scow that removed the gear from the Leroy that sure was he of his ground that he was busy suing the insurance companies for the $100,000 that was rightfully his.

Bill Walker's knowledge of Stump's "front firm," the Ladner Packing Company, had gone further than the nets and machinery he'd found hidden there. Somehow he'd also managed to explore the firm's books, to come up with some more curious facts. Seems the account cover-about $60,000. As Henry sat dejectedly in the prisoner's box, witness after witness took the stand to prove, among other things, that the cannery, built in 1928, was always running at a loss; that latterly it hadn't been a cannery at all, merely a fish distributing centre.

How less than a week after the insurance had been boosted by over $70,000, $7,000 worth of machinery and nets had been moved to Vancouver. There was evidence about the way the buildings burned independently, and how watchman Biggs disappeared. How Stump, at the fire marshal's enquiry, denied ever seeing Biggs after the fire; and there were witnesses on hand to prove that he and Biggs had been to parties together around Seattle and Tacoma.

Finally there was the bank money order transaction and the long distance calls, and Stump's identification as the man with the Seattle bank account, the man who had paid off his disappearing accomplice by money order.

On Stump's behalf, Donnenworth asked for time to file material in support of the view that his client was insane. Judge McIntosh brushed this aside, and finding Henry Stump guilty, gave him 18 months.

If it was the end of a road for Henry Stump, it was only a milestone in the career of investigator Bill Walker. 10 days later, on the retirement of his chief, W. A. Walker became provincial fire marshal and boss of the flame chasers. It's only five years ago since he retired to the peace and quiet of rural Medd Road over in the municipality of Langley.

Found them all on the premises of the Ladner Packing Company, which curiously enough was the firm that placed the insurance on the Leroy Bay plant. Man behind the Ladner Packing Company was none other than Henry Stump.

There's provision for an enquiry to be held under the Fire Marshal's Act, which usually means that the would-be arsonist is faced with the facts of life. Which is how Henry Stump was called in to the Vancouver block for a quiet chat about canneries, fire insurance and Lloyd Biggs. Indignantly, Henry denied any responsibility for the cannery fire, or any knowledge of Biggs after he left B.C.

As a matter of fact, intimidated Henry, ing the operation of the Leroy Bay plant, showed a none too healthy picture. Ten years in operation, it had only once made an annual profit. To Bill Walker it looked as if the motives were adding up, adding up to a headache for 10 insurance companies.

If he lacked the missing Biggs, still, thought Walker, he had Henry Stump, and a few days later Henry was tagged with a charge of conspiracy.

It was on the 21st of March, 1939, that the pudgy little cannery-man came up before County Court Judge J. C. McIntosh in the Vancouver courthouse, with Walter Owen and Angelo Franca appearing for the Crown, and Fred Donnenworth for the defence.

It took no less than 11 days to unravel the story behind the up coast cannery fire, that might have netted Henry Stump

Interpretation Must Be Actors' Responsibility

—Says Director

By BERT BINNY.

Among the most interesting and, possibly, contentious questions inherent in all theatrical production is that of the relationship between the director and the players and the respective responsibilities of both.

Actually, it seems to boil down to a problem of method which, in turn, depends on the individuals involved. In the last analysis there can be no unwavering rule, particularly in a sphere of activity where imagination, creativity and illusion play so great a part.

HELEN SMITH

done. The "how" of them forms a neat package under the label of technique.

Helen Smith, of 2740 Thorpe Place, who has had lots of training and lots of experience in theatrical matters, has a few opinions—and valuable ones—to offer on play direction. She believes that it is the director's responsibility to give the players "impressions of their parts in relation to the whole play" and then to leave the individual performers to develop their own stage characters. Also, she clearly infers, to see that they do it!

"The organization of a play," she says, "is no part of the director's responsibility."

And, in this connection, she feels that too much is expected of the director by amateur groups.

Helen Smith made her theatrical debut as "Pierette" in Oliphant Down's "The Maker of Dreams."

She was 17 years old at the time. The play was entered in the Dominion Drama Festival by the Little Theatre of Dauphin in Manitoba but the cast of three were all from the High School. "The Maker of Dreams" won the zone festival and Helen was judged best actress. But the regional competition in Winnipeg never materialized due to the war.

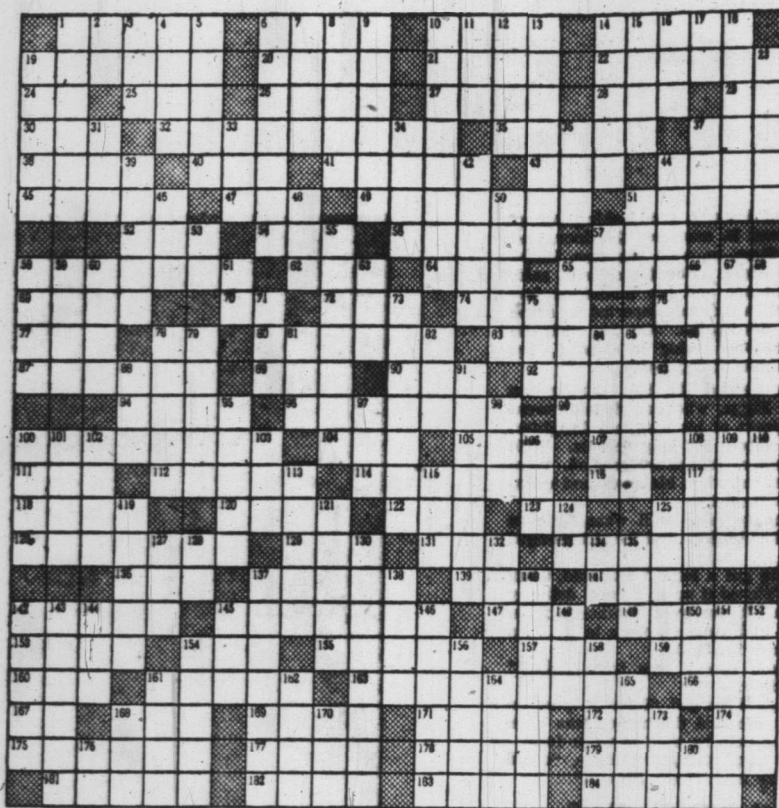

In 1948 Helen played "Emma" in the Ottawa Drama League's "Poppa Is All." This play won its regional festival and, in the finals at Ottawa, was named the best play in English.

When 1952 came around Mrs. Smith had already been in Victoria three years. With the Victoria Theatre Guild she played "Mrs. Montgomery" in "The Heiress." Once again she was named best actress and "The Heiress" best

There seems to be some confusion of terms in amateur theatre or, at any rate, some misapprehension.

Properly speaking, it is not the business of a director to tell any player how to open a door, shut a window, kiss another player or drop dead. The director should not have to. But it is his business to say when and where these things should be play in the regional festival but, once again, and as in Manitoba, that was the end of the road. The Dominion finals were held in St. John, New Brunswick, and the expense of getting the play there and back was prohibitive.

In 1959 Helen played "Herda Sarclet" in Mary Hayley Bell's "Duet for Two Hands." This was entered by the Theatre Guild in the Dominion regional festival for B.C. but it found disfavor with Richard West, very largely because he objected to the play itself.

But Helen Smith has also been very active outside of festivals. She appeared in "The Gondoliers," "Desert Song," "The Firefly" and "The Student Prince with Theatre Under the Stars. She conducted "HMS Pinafore" for the Knox Operatic Society in Vancouver.

Also she performed with the Starlight Theatre in Victoria. Because, as well as being an actress and an LTCL in speech arts, she has trained both in voice and piano.

In the direction department she produced the Southern Vancouver Island Festival winners, "Fumed Oak" by Noel Coward, and "Rise and Shine" by Elda Cadogan. Both these were one-act plays but she piloted the three-act "Night Must Fall," that grisly little opus by Emlyn Williams.

HINTS FOR SCHOOL LUNCH BOX

"Kids could not care less for vitamins, calories or a balanced diet . . . they prefer hot dogs smeared with mustard and washed down with a bottle of pop."

This was the view of a mother of three school-agers when I talked to her recently about school lunches.

Another lunch-packing mother said, "the school lunch is a necessary nuisance to my children, so the simpler the better. I give them a few easy-to-eat items and try to put in as much food value as possible without stressing the nutritional angle."

"This is one place where I resist anything experimental," said a third. "Unusual and exotic foods just aren't appreciated in the lunch box. Lunches like clothes must not be different, they must conform to what others in the lunch-packing set carry. There may be some prestige to the contents of a lunch box but anything that is strange is taboo."

NO EASY TASK

It looks to me as if the day-after-day routine of planning and packing a lunch box is no mean job. Although mother is the official lunch-packer, she apparently takes orders from family members.

Junior high school and high school students as a whole don't carry their lunch as regularly as the younger set. They may be weight-conscious or complex-conscious and their lunches will reflect this. This age group wants its lunches packed in disposable containers.

Younger children are more likely to conform to the established lunch box formula. They are not averse to carrying a metal lunch box with thermos, and an occasional covered plastic refrigerator container. It is only the little tots who are really enthusiastic about lunch in a box . . . the whole idea is a novelty and they love it.

The gayer the lunch box, the more proudly it is carried. And it usually comes home empty.

Regardless of age, most lunches include a protein item, bread or bread substitute, fresh vegetable relishes, fruit, and a sweet. Soup, milk, ice cream bars and other supplements can often be purchased at school. Make finger foods of as many items as possible, wrap things separately, include a paper napkin, and no sloppy food.

SANDWICH FAVORED

The classic lunch box item is, of course, the sandwich. In spite of their own cries for new sandwich fillings, mothers tell me that the familiar fillings of tuna, egg, cheese and peanut butter (in dozens of combinations) are still favorites by far. With so many possible combinations of foods, one could go for days without repeating a filling. Bread too comes in endless variety to help ring the changes. Almost every small child goes for a lunch box surprise.

First we'll turn the spotlight on sandwiches . . . the bread should be fresh, and do vary it. Besides white and whole wheat there are the crispy Italian and French loaves. There is pumpernickel and rye, and don't forget raisin bread. Fresh bread is easy to slice as thin or thick as you wish after it has been in the freezer overnight. Spread the butter or margarine right to the edges of the bread.

FILLINGS TO USE

Now for some fillings:

One cup chopped corned beef, a quarter cup chopped green onion, a quarter cup pickle relish and a tablespoon of prepared mustard. This amount will make five or six full-sized sandwiches.

One-half pound liver sausage, mashed, one-quarter cup chopped celery hearts, one hard cooked egg chopped, a tablespoon minced green onion and three tablespoons salad dressing. Mix well. Makes six sandwiches.

Sliced Swiss cheese (the cheese with the holes) and sliced unpeeled apple.

One mashed avocado, one tin crab (seven-and-a-half ounce), one tablespoon each of lemon juice and mayonnaise.

Hard-cooked egg chopped, combined with a chopped wiener and mayonnaise.

With peanut butter so popular here are some combinations you may not have used . . . peanut butter and mashed banana on raisin bread; avocado slices on bread spread with peanut butter, then crisp bacon crumbled on top; spread the bread with peanut butter, then with grape jelly, and then crisp crumbled bacon.

Muriel Wilson's FOOD for THOUGHT

MANY VARIETIES

Baked beans mashed with chili sauce and chopped cooked ham added.

Diced chicken and drained crushed pineapple mixed with mayonnaise and put between raisin bread.

Cream cheese and chopped ripe olives; chopped walnuts, too, are good.

Toasted sesame seeds mixed in with the butter are good in almost any sandwich. Nice to use with cheese, egg, tuna or salmon filling. We could go on an infinitum but space is precious.

Instead of flat sandwiches make roll-ups for a change. Use the same fillings as for conventional sandwiches but cut the crusts from the bread, flatten slice a bit with a rolling pin before spreading the filling. Roll up and fasten with a bright plastic toothpick. Do not cut these as you do for afternoon tea sandwiches. Just leave the roll whole.

CHEESE AND MEAT

Another idea is to roll a slice each of cheese and meat together and put the roll inside a buttered wiener bun. Next time you are making pastry save some, and make up a few little meat turnovers. Some left-over roast, chopped fine, a bit of gravy, a little chopped onion, and all well seasoned . . . for a tasty filling. You could make these meat pastries in muffin tins, but pastry lids on the little tarts.

Include some vegetable finger food in each lunch . . . celery, carrot or cucumber sticks, pieces of crisp cauliflower, a small whole tomato, deviled eggs, cheese sticks or cubes, all wrapped separately in foil.

Small boxes of raisins, little foil packages of dates, figs, dried apricots or prunes, or a chocolate bar, add interest and goodness. Dried fruit like dates can be made non-sticky by rolling in sugar . . . white, demerara or icing sugar all serve the same purpose.

Before going on to "sweets," just a word about wieners. Our opening paragraph sounds a little disparaging to this popular meat. I want to say that there is not a thing wrong with the presence of wieners in the lunch box. They are an excellent protein and if children like them by all means let them have them.

A little lunch box trick which junior might appreciate: scald the thermos so it is hot inside; have a couple of wieners heated and plump and pop them into the thermos; they will still be hot at noon, all ready to be popped into a well-buttered bun.

GOOD DESSERTS

Cookies, muffins and cup cakes are a good dessert choice for a lunch box. Muffins and cup cakes are best baked in paper cups set in your muffin tins. Instead of frosting, which doesn't always carry well, bake something sweet in the centre of each. Fill the paper cup partly full of batter then put in a spoonful of jam, a stuffed date or prune or a few maraschino cherries. This "surprise in the middle" is less rich than frosting and quite as acceptable.

And now a few cookie and muffin recipes. These date gems are moist and delicious. They could be split and buttered. Cream together three tablespoons shortening, one-half cup brown sugar and one well-beaten egg. Add one-quarter cup milk and three-quarters cup water. Add one cup natural bran (cooking variety), then one cup all-purpose flour sifted with one-half teaspoon salt and three teaspoons baking powder. Last add one cup pitted and chopped dates. Spoon into well-greased muffin pans and bake in a 375° oven for about thirty minutes. Makes one dozen.

If you have several lunches to make each day it would be well to have plenty of cookies on hand. This recipe for rolled oat cookies makes a lot. If you are a small family cut it in half.

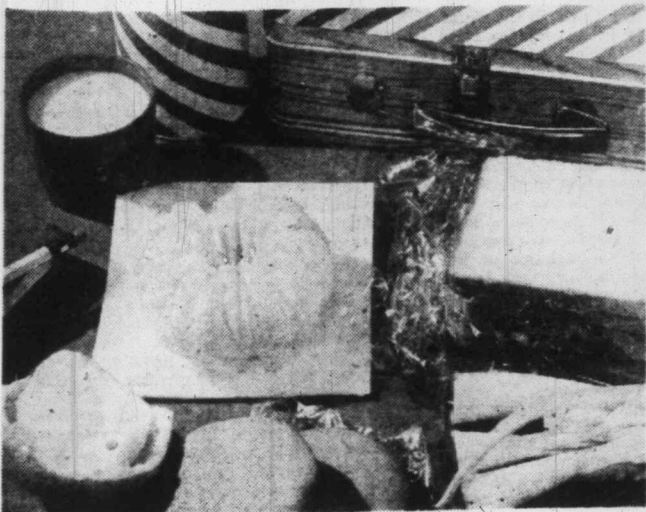

Into a large bowl put two cups rolled oats (regular or quick), two cups all-purpose flour, sifted before measuring, one teaspoon salt, one teaspoon baking powder and one-and-a-quarter cups brown sugar.

KEEP JAR FILLED

Work in one cup very soft shortening and then add enough warm water to make a soft dough. Drop by teaspoon on greased cookie sheet and press out flat and thin with a wet fork. Bake about 15 minutes in a 350° oven. Cool on a rack and store in an air-tight tin or jar. I like to keep a jar of date filling on hand, when I want a change from the plain cookies I put a spoonful of the filling between two cookies.

Nut loaves, date loaves or banana bread are splendid for slicing for lunches. This banana loaf is particularly nice. The glaze fruit makes it a little different.

Lunches should be more than a snack . . . the lunch box tot should find substantial food in his box . . . food that is appetizing and fun to eat.

Veteran Newspaperman Picks—

McBRIDE 1; OLIVER 2

The Plumed Knight of Debate was a title that quite befitted Sir Richard McBride long before he was made a knight in fact. It has been my lot to know more or less personally every premier from McBride to Byron Johnson; and I repeat what I have said before: that the two outstanding leaders were McBride and John Oliver.

Of the two I would class McBride as the best leader, although Oliver was outstanding in natural ability, force of character and analytical power. If John could handle problems, Dick knew how to handle men.

McBride was a good showman, and in that respect followed such leaders as Laurier, Roosevelt and Churchill. He knew how to make the most of that large personality adorned by a matted and curly crown enhanced by premature greyness.

I do not believe that Dick (as I prefer to call him because I found him so jovial and friendly) had an ounce of malice in his make-up, and was generous enough on rare occasions to praise an able opponent, as when he described Laurier as "a great man and a great Canadian." On Laurier's visit to the coast, he had a fine reception prepared for him in the Legislative Buildings. Some accused Dick of trying to look like Laurier, but I think that any resemblance was natural and required no trying.

BEST IN CANADA

My old friend, Dr. Alex Robinson, for many years B.C.'s superintendent of education, once told me that Fighting Joe Martin told him he considered McBride the best politician in Canada.

This would probably be disputed by followers of Sir Wilfred Laurier, but it was a remarkable statement coming from one who a few years before in the Legislature seemed ready to meet him in physical combat. Moreover it came from a pronounced if erratic Liberal.

Opposed to this was the remark of such a dyed-in-the-wool Conservative as the clever and acedulous Sir Clive Phillips Wolley who described McBride as "talk with hair on."

When I first entered the press gallery in 1905 I thought that McBride fulminated too much and used far too many words to express few ideas. One of his opponents described his speeches as "frothy." But in a year or two, notably after the death of a brother in New Westminster, he toned down, and one of his most eloquent and fair opponents congratulated him for having attained a more gracious tone.

The old partisan abuse seemed to have disappeared and he became a master of the art of placating political opponents. I remember once after Parker Williams had attacked him with his rough Welsh humor, Dick went over to him, patted him on the shoulder and left him smiling.

Nevertheless, that did not prevent Parker from saying:

"Mister Speaker, I came down between sessions to see the government about some much needed road work in my district."

"I came away thinking I had got everything I asked for, but by the time I had got to the top of the hill on the way back I began to wonder whether I had got anything, and by the time I reached home, Mister Speaker, I came to the conclusion that I had been bunced."

At all of which Dick laughed as heartily as the rest.

In truth, he was a master hand at dealing with delegations. Seldom did anyone go away displeased, and seldom did they get much of what they had asked for.

One of his chief opponents was the tireless John Oliver, who loaded the order paper with questions, and was persistent in his attacks on the floor.

Because he represented opposition constituents, they were never dealt with justly in their requests, he intimated.

"Well, you got a million-dollar bridge," said McBride.

"Yes," replied John, "and you charge me a dollar every time I go over it if only with a suckling pig."

NOT FOR ETERNITY

The premier reminded him that he was one of those signing a petition and agreeing to the terms.

"Yes," retorted John, "but that was for a time and not for eternity."

The first time I saw Dick McBride was at the opening of the first New Westminster bridge. It was a great event and all the world and his wife seemed to have come to New Westminster that day. Standing on the overhead traffic bridge, I saw Dick standing on the rear platform of the first train to cross the river. It was really a great event, since it eased the way from the rich Delta farmlands into Vancouver. In fact one farmer did a dance at the head of the bridge, saying it was something he had waited 20 years for.

It was in speaking at the banquet that followed the opening that Dick made a faux pas that I diligently reported. In patriotic spirit he said: "With the completion of the bridge we forge another link in that tie of friendship with the south at which the world stands aghast."

The opposition papers did not fail to rag him about "that ghastly tie of friendship," but he easily outlived it. One of his ruses was to keep on good terms with the press.

It was about my second year in the press gallery that he invited all the reporters to a dinner at his home on Burdett Avenue.

The location caused him to remark: "You can always find me half-way between the Old Ladies' home and the hospital," referring to St. Joseph's.

He had unfailing faith in the possibilities of his native province. I interviewed him after his first visit to the north while the Grand Trunk Pacific was being pushed through. He said he had discovered a new country with new possibilities which he would entitle "New British Columbia."

By

It was this faith that led him into the support of enterprises that many of us thought were premature. When his government decided to guarantee the bonds of Mackenzie and Mann to build through to the coast, two of his most respected ministers resigned. They were R. G. Tatlow, the able minister of finance, and F. J. Fulton of Kamloops, the father of the present federal minister of justice.

Their view was that so large a guarantee would place too great a burden on the credit of the province. Many of us also thought that the guarantee would have better employment in railway construction to the Peace River district, and then through some alternative route to the coast. Otherwise, the only new country tapped was the logged-off North Thompson valley. For the rest it was a case of paralleling the CPR to the coast.

The next much-criticized railway venture was the PGE. Today this vision has been fulfilled after hanging in the air at both ends for nearly half a century. At the time, however, it seemed to be poorly considered and premature in view of the population and developed resources of the time.

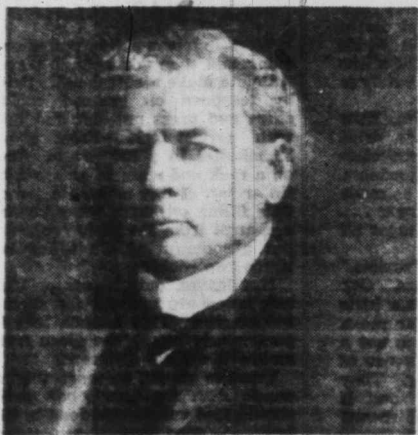

Nevertheless, Dick's railway projects were loudly supported in the great real estate boom of the time and carried him to sweeping victory in 1912, when only two Socialists and not a single Liberal was elected in opposition.

I was chosen with two or three other reporters to accompany McBride and Bowser through the province in that 1912 campaign. For Dick and Bowser it was really a tour of triumph. Brass bands or fireworks greeted them in different places and opposition seemed nil. That campaign was destined to be Dick's greatest and last and he never acquitted himself better.

I think it was at Golden that the train was held up for about five minutes waiting for Dick's arrival. He came along, panting, and when we berated him for the delay explained:

"If you were as old and fat and grey as I am you wouldn't run so very fast either." As at this time he was only a little over 40, the "old" seemed out of place.

Throughout that trip he was as buoyant and optimistic as he had good reason to be. As he said, "All the indications point to a landslide and sweeping victory for the government."

EARLY DEATH WAS TRAGEDY

Once when riding along in the railway car, Frank McNamara, who was on the trip for the Vancouver Province, warned him that his policies might plunge the province into economic disaster. With a paper roll in his hand Dick struck him on the shoulder as if knocking him: "Don't be so damned gloomy, man. The country is getting along first rate."

FROM TEAT TO TIN

Dick enjoyed his meals with real gusto, and in the dining car was at his most jovial. Once he let us into the secrets of one of his methods of increasing popularity.

He had been asked to speak at the opening of an apple show. "Little I knew about apples so I asked a grower to give me the names of the different varieties, and when I got up I reeled off a spiel about McIntosh Reds, Jonathans, Cox's Pippins and what have you. I guess by the time I got through they thought I was an expert."

At another time he was asked to speak at a fair featuring dairy cattle in the Fraser Valley. "So I asked a fellow what would be the best subject for me to speak about. As they were trying to organize a canned milk factory he thought that would be suitable. 'So I gave them a talk I called 'From the Teat to the Tin,' and spoke of the great business canned milk would open up for them; that seemed to suit them all right."

One thing that alarmed Bowser was that in the small up-country towns McBride was in the habit of inviting everybody to come to Victoria. Bowser thought that if they all came at once he might be so overwhelmed he could scarcely attend to any of them. I mentioned this to Dick but he was not at all disturbed.

"Sure, let them all come and we'll give them a good time."

But journeys of triumph and spurts of popularity, like all things, run their course. In that 1912 election Dick and his government had reached the top of the hill and the only movement must be downward.

At that time the great western real estate boom had reached its apex, and disasters followed thick and fast.

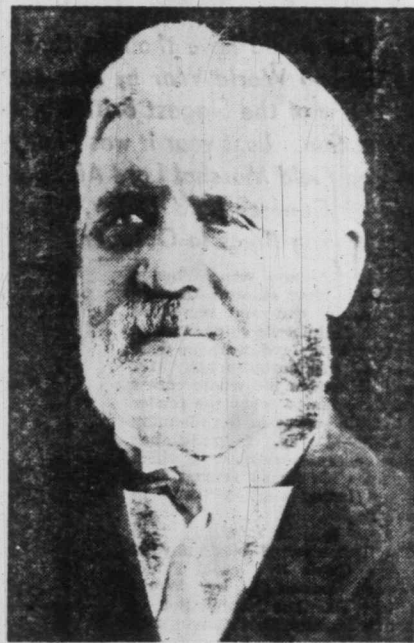

BANK WENT BROKE

In the great metropolitan city of Vancouver, a trust company went broke and its manager shot himself. At the same time the Bank of Vancouver crashed, and with both of these many leading and respected citizens were reduced to comparative poverty. Naturally, all this told against the government and the signs of its coming downfall could scarcely be ignored.

Before it came McBride had one more dramatic act to perform. In the early years of the First World War he acquired two second-hand submarines from the United States. It is true they never saw active service but it was a good gesture with Esquimalt harbor and the B.C. coast exposed as it was. Finally they were taken over by the federal government. It was the last flourish of the oriflame of the knightly Sir Richard.

At last the enterprise that had swollen his popularity brought about his downfall. It all happened in a caucus of the Conservative party.

MacKenzie and Mann had taken over a big fishery concern among other things to add to their enterprises. The premier, no doubt with the idea of priming the pump to enable the entrepreneurs to carry on in face of falling investments, proposed to increase the guarantee of their bonds to enable them to borrow more money. His right-hand man and attorney-general, W. J. Bowser, was, directly opposed. A majority in the caucus agreed with him and voted down Dick's proposal. Evidently, he regarded this as a want of confidence motion; he resigned and turned the government over to Mr. Bowser.

HONEST JOHN OLIVER

I have never discovered that there was any personal ill will in the matter. Dick's health was failing and he may not have felt too sorry to be relieved of the weight of leadership to take over the less pressing office of agent-general for the province in London.

At least he was spared the humiliation of leading his government in a disastrous election. For himself he might well have said: "I was holding up the banner that had never known defeat." Which was true.

His stay in London was pathetically short. Among other things, his sight was failing. He was kind to the last, but within two years of London he died at the age of 47. He was our youngest premier, and so far as I know, died at the youngest age of any.

The Scents and the Scenery of a Holiday So Well Remembered

MY FEET remember the west coast: All that beautiful, fine sand to caress my bare soles and sift through my toes, the slight sinking sensation—"maybe this is quicksand"—as we walked swiftly through the tide pools, and the sudden pulling sensation as a stepped-on sea anemone withdrew its tentacles in self defence.

The slippery grasses, and the little barnacles that seem to have been rounded off by the ceaseless pounding of the sea until they're less damaging than those in our sheltered waters!

The scraping of a nailbrush to remove asphaltum which floats in—from where? Tidewater oil drilling in California?—and lurks in sand-covered balls far above the high tide mark to cling to the feet of the unwary!

The cushioned buoyancy of soil made springy by years' accumulation of humus and leaf mould, all around our cottage!

My nose recalls dust—but not nearly so much as I expected—and dust tangles my hair, though oddly enough it doesn't look dirty. It must be blonde dust.

My hands recall the fact that a razor clam, encased in two shells which look as if they had been varnished, can move far faster than human fingers through sand and leave the digger staring foolishly at an empty hole fast filling with sea water.

My whole body feels again the tingle of the open ocean's water, so much colder and saltier than Brentwood Bay, and the slap of the waves against me as I merely duck up and down, obeying the admonition, "Now don't try to swim out; the undertow could carry you out to sea!"

I'm sure Fifi, our little continental car, recalls several jolts she experienced when her lord and master punished her tires to spare her undercarriage from an especially prominent piece of bedrock that threatened to disembowel her.

But most of all, when I close my eyes and think "Tofino trip," I can see a series of pictures: the clear, sparkling blue of Sproat Lake spread out hundreds of feet below us; the purple-pink of fireweed bordering the road and striving to cover the bareness left by the bareness of man; the fresh green of dogwood leaves and the many-shaded verdure of the deep untouched woods.

The cool emerald of pools, interspersed by white rushing water in the Taylor and Kennedy Rivers; blue again, as the great expanse of tree-bordered Kennedy Lake picks up the sky color and bounces it back purpled to the mountains;

Tofino with a setting worthy of a jewel, but at present just a small town with a long way to go to realize the potential of the beauty of its mountain, timber and ocean backdrop;

The bright yellow of little flowers that grew in sand, the sea-green translucence of the waves before they break, the peacock blue of the insides of certain mussel shells, the lighter blue-green of the flower-like heart of a sea anemone!

And finally, though I look at the sea every day of my life, I see the totally different look of the wide ocean, rolling unimpeded all the way from the Orient, and sunset through the salt spray as it breaks over a high rock bordering Cox's Bay, silhouetting Leonard Island lighthouse with just a hint of haze that will be fog when we awake in the morning.

Lord Ismay's Turn Next

One would have thought that the commanders of the Second World War by now had all had their say, but a few of the biggest British guns are still wheeling into action. Last year it was Field Marshal Montgomery and Field Marshal Lord Alanbrooke. Next it is the turn of General Lord Ismay, whose memoirs are due from Viking Press in October.

General Ismay was Winston Churchill's chief of staff through most of the war and served as the prime minister's chief agent in all his military and strategic dealings. In this autobiography for the book covers his whole career—General Ismay takes the reader behind the scenes in the planning of a global war. Churchill has written a prefatory note, in which he quotes his earlier remark that he and Ismay worked "hand in glove."

The long-awaited biography of Zsa-Zsa Gabor by Gerold Frank will be published by World on Sept. 20. The combination of the effervescent Miss Gabor with the emollient Mr. Frank is expected to yield a story which, if not the most revealing of the year, should be at least its gayest and frothiest.

Miss Gabor is a unique figure in the sense that she receives the maximum publicity in gossip columns for less actual performance than anyone else we can think of. She does this by dint of beauty and personality and it is these elusive qualities Mr. Frank has had to capture in his book. Probably the most successful "collaborator-biographer" of headline women of his day, he has turned his attention this time from women fighting failure (e.g. Lillian Roth, Diana Barrymore) to a woman who has known nothing but success all her life.

The rest of the Gabor menage is also handled, albeit somewhat gingerly, by the courageous Mr. Frank.

Since we are talking today mostly of show-biz personalities, it is appropriate to mention that Peter Ustinov, the highly-talented British actor-playwright-novelist, has written "The Loser," a novel to be published by Little, Brown in October. The hero is a typical Nazi officer who falls in love with an Italian girl and begins to unfreeze. The story presents a cutting contrast between the Germans and the Italians, the sort of thing Mr. Ustinov demonstrates so tellingly on the stage. The novel is said to be alternately farce and satire, with several powerful and compassionate characterizations.

The first full-length biography of Marilyn Monroe, by Maurice Zolotow, has been announced by Harcourt, Brace for October. It is not an expanded magazine profile job, but a genuine biography which took six years to research and a year to write. Miss Monroe, as we all know by now, is no stereotyped movie star either in her background or her character, and Mr. Zolotow has undertaken the near-impossible task of separating the maid from the myth in his book.

WOLFE BIOGRAPHY 'BOILS AND POURS'

THOMAS WOLFE—By Elizabeth Nowell. Doubleday & Company, Inc., $6.75.

Reviewed by ELIZABETH BINKS

Thomas Wolfe's publisher, Maxwell Perkins, once refused a writer permission to do a biography of Wolfe and he gave as his reason, "It would be hard to get Tom right."

"... I began telling myself that if there ever was a writer who didn't need to be 'got right', who had done it himself in hundreds and thousands of his own words, that writer was Thomas Wolfe," Elizabeth Nowell says in an introduction to her biography of Wolfe.

Therein lies her great success.

Her book "boils and pours" with the story of this man; it is a great sprawling tapestry of words, most of which are Wolfe's—rambling, undisciplined and wild but alive and bloody.

Wolfe as a boy was a "queer, curly-headed, passionate little creature" who was not weaned until he was three and wore long curls and slept with his mother until he was "quite a big boy."

From his novels, autobiographical works, speeches, notes and letters, Miss Nowell shows Wolfe as he struggled to find himself and his America, pouring out "the history of his experience as a storm, a river, a flood, an elemental force which had to find release" or else "destroy and smother the person who had it."

Wolfe—striding along East Forty-Ninth St. at dawn chanting "I wrote 10,000 words today"; sitting silent on a sightseeing bus in Belgium with James Joyce, both men too overcome with shyness to say a word.

He was utterly incapable of editing his own work. After hours of consultation, a distraught Perkins would hand him a chapter for final revision—only to get it back several thousand words longer.

Technically he was the most imperfect of writers. There was never any plot, only a vast and deeply ingrained plan that grew tortuously and slowly resolved itself with him.

Wolfe's relationship with Maxwell Perkins, the renowned Scribner's editor who handled most of his writing and published his first two novels, Look Homeward Angel and Of Time and the River, is one of the most fascinating parts of the book.

The anecdotes about Wolfe go on and on and Miss Nowell has recorded many of them with the same fervor in which they were lived.

LOVED GERMANS

Wolfe in Berlin on the brink of war, so much in love with the German people that he was blind to the evils of Nazism—stuffing his ears with cotton for days after seeing Beethoven's birthplace so he could catch "the sense of listening, of seclusion within the fortress of oneself... entrenched within the ramparts of the soul... the elements of a world within him."

Wolfe writing to F. Scott Fitzgerald: "... But don't forget, Scott, that a great writer is not only a leaver-outer but also a putter-inner and that Shakespeare and Cervantes... will be remembered for what they put in... remembered, I venture to say, for as long as Monsieur Flaubert will be remembered for what he left out..."

Elizabeth Nowell is a superb biographer. She neither intrudes nor presumes; she writes dispassionately and without involvement. What she has done, in part, is to help Wolfe write his autobiography. Read her book; it tells a profoundly moving and fascinating story.

READING FOR THE YOUNG

trated by Dorothy Bayley Morse. Crowell. 192 pp. $2.95. As suspenseful as a serial but with enough development of character, perceptivity and good writing to raise this book to the level of the better fiction for school-age girls. A backwoods community provides the setting, and a would-be tomboy with heavy home responsibilities is the heroine. Ages 10-12.

Terrible, Horrible Edie. By E. C. Spykman. Harcourt, Brace. 224 pp. $3.25. Another book about the amusing Cares family. Edie, the individualist, has an exciting sam-mer, which should provide entertainment for girls not equally surrounded by hurricanes, boats and jewel thieves. Ages 10-14.

The Tournament of the Lions. By Jay Williams. Illustrated by Ezra Jack Keats. Walck. 120 pp. $2.75. An ambitious attempt to represent medieval life and the values and meaning of chivalry. The "play-within-a-play" device of the Song of Roland, however, interferes with the interesting and well-documented story of two young squires in their first tournament. Ages 10-14.

MADE $45,000,000 OUT OF 'OOMPH'

TAKEN AT THE FLOOD:
The Story of Albert D. Lasker. By John Gunther. New York: Harper & Bros. 320 pp. $4.95.

"He was, in a country where salesmanship was the first profession of the land, an unerringly good salesman. He could sell a horsecar to a railroad." All the more remarkable then that Albert Lasker, whom Gunther calls "one of the most phenomenal Americans of his time," never became a national figure. He was never profiled by any magazine, put on any covers, or written about in books. He himself never wrote anything for publication, and in 50 years made only half a dozen speeches. Yet no man in his time did more to create publicity for others.

If this paradox proves anything at all, it is that fleeting are the uses of publicity. Lasker died of cancer in May, 1952, at the beginning of his 75th year. This biography by Gunther more than atones for the omissions of others. It is surprising to find the profiler of continents turning his attention to a human subject, but Lasker, it appears, was a close friend of Gunther's for the last decade of his life, and this book is by way of a tribute to a friend.

Lasker's achievements—profitable if unpublicized—did much to shape the way we live. He was one of the fathers of modern advertising, and worked his way from the bottom to the top of a great agency. He is the man generally credited with putting the "oomph" into advertising. Many of the slogans we got to know were his. (Sample: "Keep That Schoolgirl Complexion.") In 44 years, we are told, he amassed $45,000,000 out of advertising, most of which he later gave away in acts of philanthropy. In a business society like ours, Gunther's accolade is perhaps the supreme one: "Lasker's money all came out of his head—he made it by sheer brain power."

Money, though, was not enough. In 1940 he met his future wife, Mary, and married her. She transformed him by adding to his wealth—conscious, taste and good citizenship. The change was startling. "Old friends seeing him after an interval," Gunther reports, "could scarcely believe this was the same man." From this point on the story is an account of the education (in higher things) of Albert Lasker.

He began going to art galleries with his wife

(who knew a good deal about paintings) and soon assembled an outstanding collection of modern art. He busied himself with medical research on four different fronts, and raised a record sum for cancer, the disease that was later to take his life. In short, to brain was added heart.

So what we really have here is the story of the redemption of wealth. Because of its upbeat ending it was worth telling. The fact that a writer of Gunther's caliber did the telling may yet turn out to have been the most impressive of Lasker's achievements.

DOUBLE THEME DRAMA IN NEW SNOW NOVEL

BY WILLIAM D. PATTERSON

Justice is seldom simple, and the paths to decision for men in power are seldom either straight or smooth. This double theme is expounded with dramatic force in C. P. Snow's new novel, The Affair (Scribner's).

The locale is Cambridge University, and the affair of the title seems slight enough at the start. A young scientist of the college faculty, Donald Howard, has been dismissed on a charge of using a faked photograph to document a piece of research.

A radical, rather offensive type, Howard makes enemies easily and annoys those who would be his friends and champions in what begins slowly to develop into a crisis of justice. For evidence is uncovered after his dismissal that strongly indicates Howard was wrongly accused.

However, to right this apparent wrong is not so simple. Decisions involving careers and academic ambitions among the Fellows of Cambridge University must be made when it would be easier and safer to let sleeping dogs lie. Even the central protagonist, Lewis Eliot, is at first inclined to stand aside.

Eliot, familiar to readers of Snow's seven preceding novels in the "Strangers and Brothers" series, here finds himself in a situation and setting reminiscent of the fifth novel in the series, "The Masters," when Cambridge also was torn by conflict.

As Eliot moves from the role of observer to major and finally decisive participant in this increasingly complex controversy the novel steadily rises toward a powerful climax that undoubtedly helped it stand out prominently on the Saturday Review's poll of books being most widely read and enjoyed this week.

Other leading best-readers on this week's list were:

Advise and Consent, by Allen Drury (Doubleday). The dramatic, factual novel of high politics in Washington that won the Pulitzer Prize.

Grant Moves South, by Bruce Catton (Little, Brown). A splendid study of Grant, the man and soldier, at the bitter battles of Shiloh and Vicksburg.

The Leopard, by Giuseppe Lampedusa (Pantheon). A work of art, this only novel by an Italian nobleman studies a time of revolutionary change in Italy—1860—when Garibaldi appeared on the scene.

Mr. Citizen, by Harry S. Truman (Geis). The former president vigorously reviews his career in retirement, just as outspoken and controversial as ever.

The Good Years, by Walter Lord (Harper). A nostalgic recreation of the hopeful era after the turn of the century when all good things seemed possible right up to 1914.

Hawaii, by James A. Michener (Random House). A huge, highly readable novel about the fabulous origins and development of the 50th state.

The way in which people reach decisions is neither easy nor simple, even when they are conscientious men with good intentions. Justice often hangs by a thread of complex and mixed motives among the men who are her custodians.

'JEST A SECOND'

"Yes, dear, I'd be willing to live on your income—if you can get another one for yourself."

HARRY S. TRUMAN
... controversial as ever.

The theme of power, of decision, of justice has absorbed Sir Charles Snow throughout his long and varied career, as novelist, as scientist, as civil servant, as industrialist. In peace and war he has observed men in politics, in business and in academia advancing their careers, seeking power, exercising power, making decisions, choosing and rejecting other aspirants for place and power. This process has fascinated him as part of the very innermost texture of British life, and of the human condition.

So again while his arena is Cambridge University and a search crisis among the Fellows, his concern is as always the larger theme.

To his task he brings his intelligence and his compassion, which, coupled with his very real narrative powers, turns this novel into a rewarding reading experience, with many unexpected turns and insights that illuminate the endless mystery of the human personality.

Some Found It Brash and Uncouth with Its Girls Too Fast, But—

EARLY VICTORIANS LOVED SAN FRANCISCO VERVE

Premier Bennett's announcement that British Columbia will shortly open an office in San Francisco recalls the historic link that has existed for more than a century between this capital and the beautiful, fascinating city by the Golden Gate.

By
JAMES K.
NESBITT

A century ago Victoria and San Francisco were close neighbors, so to speak. There was no Vancouver, Seattle and Portland were hardly worth mentioning. British Columbia's first business firms were branches of San Francisco firms. In Victoria were the "What Cheer House" and "The San Francisco Baths" and a branch of Wells Fargo.

Some of our leading citizens had homes both here and in San Francisco—among them shipping and sugar merchant R. P. Rithet of "Hollybank," who was mayor of Victoria in 1885.

Victorians, priding themselves on being British, despite a polyglot population, sometimes turned up their collective noses at San Francisco as a brash place, uncouth, not too genteel.

Joseph William Trutch hated the place and its people, as he wrote to his sister Emily in England: "... a perfect pandemonium—the most complete presentment of unsuppressed vice and iniquity of every shape that the world has ever realized. These Yankees are the most disagreeable, vulgar lot ... I cannot imagine to coalesce with them ... their swearing is awful ... the most revolting and blasphemous oaths are quite common in conversation ... they are desperate talkers, and generally make more noise and bluster than reality. To anyone who has been brought up as a gentleman, and who holds to our English ideals of honesty and honorable dealing, this country must be hateful. I feel quite out of element among such people, and long to get to some part of the world where the truth is spoken on purpose."

JOHN BULL'S STORY

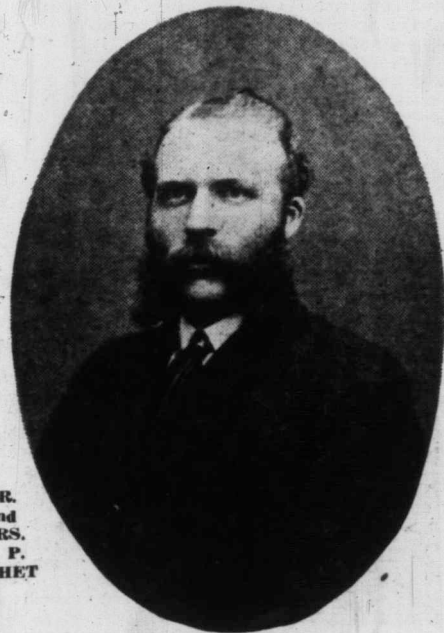

Victorians often went to San Francisco on business and pleasure, for, unlike Trutch, most of them found it a captivating city.

One local citizen wrote home to the Colonist, signing himself John Bull. Wonder who he was? We'll never know. But his accounts of his visits to San Francisco form a nice bit of the history of that place.

In 1862 he wrote: "The American Volunteer is a funny fellow. You see him standing in semi-French costume on a street corner, puffing his pipe or Havana cigar, and speaking the true Cork lingo. "In fact, the Irishman is ubiquimore honest than their gayer sisters—a light upon some hearth, the very safeguards of society. What would the Hetaira not give for a tithe of half their happiness?"

San Francisco had a glamour and excitement in those days that John Bull could not resist, any more than most of us today can resist: "... Vivid are the impressions of bold and ingenious American enterprise made upon my mind by the rapid and extensive improvements—intimate are the commercial relations destined always to exist between Victoria and this great seaport of California—after a protracted residence amid the rustic life and scenery of Victoria, I felt, in emerging from my hotel here into the gay streets of San Francisco, like another Rip Winkle."

Yes, the rustic life and scenery of Victoria are all very well—but they pall sometimes—and how exhilarating it is to go to San Francisco, ride the cable cars and attend the theatre and drink of the pulsating leisure of its teeming streets, and look down from the Top of the Mark on the beauties of the bay and its bridges.

John Bull found so long ago that "buildings formerly on Montgomery Street ... have been displaced by edifices vast and splendid.

"Sand hills that a few years since presented an aspect of hopeless desolation, are now levelled into spacious streets and lined with stores and dwellings. Mansions embellished with turrets and Corinthian pillars frequently meet the eye in parts removed from the centre of the city."

COPIED IN VICTORIA

It was this type of architecture that was copied in many of Victoria's earliest buildings and homes to such an extent that Provincial Archivist Willard E. Ireland, to the horror of those who like to fool tourists, is not, and never was, a bit of old England but a bit of old San Francisco.

John Bull met many former Victorians in San Francisco, and he was astonished, and perhaps a little envious, at the change that had come over them: "An air of comfort and grandeur pervades the busy crowds that incessantly cross one another's paths, and quondam inhabitants of Victoria who have moved hither have in no instance proved competent to resist the transforming spell that is exercised over all visitors from the tiny capital of Vancouver Island, that insignificant depot of British commerce in the Pacific."

"Those who rejoice in the euphonious name of skeddaddlers, as well as those who have withdrawn from Victoria under more honorable circumstances, have assumed a stately mien and costly attire. It is with difficulty one could recognize them, enveloped in 'stove-pipe' hats and glossy broad-cloths."

And here was John Bull's punchline about San Francisco: "The only way to avoid public scorn here is by taking refuge in sumptuous living."
